Renovation

As students arrived on campus, everything seemed the same as the year before. However, nothing ever remains the same, and as the year progressed, students found more variations to what they considered traditions. To accommodate an ever-growing freshman class, the South 40 was temporarily renovated in order to accommodate everyone. Triples were formed and some students were even forced to move into lounges. On the first Thursday night of the year, students flocked to what was traditionally Thursday Night at the Rat. To the surprise of many, this ritual was slightly different as the students found that the Rat had not received their liquor license. As the end of the year approached, another long-standing Washington event was altered. The traditional Thurtene carnival remained, but was switched from a night-time event to a day-time carnival. Despite the time change, everyone had a great time both before and during the carnival, thus keeping the true spirit of Thurtene alive.

A TIME FOR...

Just as things must always change, there are some aspects of school which remain the same, things which are classified as traditions. Washington University would not be known for its work load if students were not forced to pull regular all-nighters. These late night sessions would always be accompanied by a large Domino's pizza ( a W.I.L.D. pizza if funds were short). For study breaks, students followed the tradition of tunneling under the Quad, sledding down the I.M. field with trays "borrowed" from Seconds Please, and breaking out of the dorm for a night on the Row. Finally, no student could ever look back on college at Washington without remembering fights for parking places, the Bear's "Death", a multitude of campus dogs, Chan Dan riding on the Homecoming floats, and starting and ending college with a trip on the President.

TIME FOR...

Throughout the year, students walking through campus were forced to face endless construction as the school tried to keep up with changing times. New buildings, such as Jolley Hall at the Engineering School, were planned in order to meet the increased needs of the students. Innovations also occurred on the South 40. A new lounge was built in Liggett, with plans for lounges in other dorms to follow soon after. In addition to the physical changes, there were many new additions to the life at Washington. One new event which offered the potential to become a tradition was the first Earth Day. On this day in April students traveled to Forest Park as a change of pace from Thurtene Carnival. There, students and citizens of the community were entertained while receiving information on preserving the earth.

HOME COMING

G Good Vibrations

With more than a full week of activities centered around Homecoming, it seemed virtually impossible for students not to get involved and into the homecoming spirit of "Good Vibrations". Events such as bonfires, frisbee throws, and float building gave students the chance to show their school spirit and have fun at the same time. Although student turnout at some events did not seem too significant, it did, however, match the organizers' projections for this year. Said sophomore Alexis Waldman, co-chairperson of the frisbee event, "The reason that most of us are on the special events committee is because we want to get people more into the spirit of Homecoming. We want Homecoming to spread everywhere!" Added senior Alana Sharenow, Homecoming Committee Chairman, "Homecoming has been growing in magnitude during my four years here...and I've seen more and more culmination of campus unity." Following the projections of the Homecoming committee, students did take advantage of the many activities planned though some were better attended than others. Commented freshman Erik

Sock, defensive lineman on the football team, "I thought it was a good event, but I wish more people would have shown up." However, according senior Doug Anderson, the events chairman, "This is the highest turnout we've had in the four years I've been here."

Floatbuilding was the most publicized of all pre-Homecoming events, with all of the floats incorporating the theme of "Good Vibrations". Although the Greeks started building their floats days ahead of the actual parade on Saturday, some residence halls tried to complete the entire floatbuilding job by starting the night before. Remarkd freshman Matt McCaughey, "The most important thing we learned is that there are no stores that sell blue spray paint at four-thirty in the morning. Our order was messed up so that we didn't even have poms and had to use old Student Life newspapers. We didn't finish until after six the next morning, and the depressing thing was that after the parade it only took ninety seconds to tear the whole float down." But despite all of the obstacles, everyone had a great time, making all of the hard work worthwhile.

arty in the Rain

It is said that no matter how much things change, history repeats itself. Washington University students certainly learned this the hard way. Both the Fall and Spring WILD's were accompanied by cold temperatures and rain. Gene Kelly had the right idea in not allowing rain to stop him from singing and enjoying himself and for both Fall and Spring WILD Mr. Kelly's example was followed by the students of Washington University who refused to let the rain dampen their spirits. Paying no heed to the weather, students filled the quad for the festivities including The Romantic and Who Framed Roger Rabbit? in the fall and the Bodeans in the spring. The Romantics were also a repeat of history, as they played WILD the spring before.

The night before WILD, people slept in the quad to reserve a space. Students arrived with everything from couches and lawn chairs to grills and picnic meals to frisbees and footballs. By noon, the crowd started to gather as students were getting out of class. People talked, ate, drank, and basically just hung out to the sounds of the opening bands. By dinner time, all of the grills were going full force, but none were cooking hot dogs and hamburgers fast enough to satisfy the crowd. After dinner, people got ready to really party to the sounds of the main band, followed by the feature movie presentation. No one cared about the rain; everyone was having too much fun.

Where's the Party?

"What's going on tonight?" This familiar dilemma was often solved by taking a quick walk under Forsyth and reading the walls of the underpass. If you ever wanted to know what was happening in the near future, or where a party or event was taking place, all you had to do, at any time was check here. The underpass provided free advertising to anyone who wanted it, so long as the set guidelines were followed, such as waiting until an event was finished before painting over it, and not stealing a spot that had already been reserved.

Painting the underpass always provided a good time, and often resulted in more paint ending up on the painters rather than on the underpass walls. If you were to remove a chunk from the walls of the underpass, looking at this cross section would provide you with an idea of just how much happened on this campus from the time of the first paint job to the latest one.

The one drawback to advertising here was that it was only visible to people who lived on the Forty as they passed on the way to campus, whereas people who lived off of the Forty rarely looked at the underpass. However, all things considered, this was the most effective and fun way to advertise.

SOLIDARITY TO ALL SPECIAL OLYMPICS

Making Friends

There is nothing like the feeling you get from helping other people. Hundreds of Washington University students found this out, or at least rediscovered the feeling, during the Special Olympics. Many floors of residence hall, fraternities and sororities sponsored basketball teams composed of special athletes.

Sponsors arrived at the athletic complex early in the morning on the day of the event so that they would be ready when the teams arrived. Colorful posters were made by sponsors for their teams and hung in Francis Gym. During the day's activities, sponsors cheered their teams on while kids played ball. Athletes and sponsors were paired off for the day to spend the time in between the game together. When people were not busy playing a game or cheering new found friends on in a game, they could go to a small carnival arranged by Alpha Phi Omega, or to any of the other activities set up such as a petting zoo and cupcake decorating.

Throughout the day, both athletes and sponsors enjoyed themselves. Regardless of the score of the game, everyone was a winner.

CULTURAL CELEBRATION

xperiencing Diversity

"All the world is a stage: when it comes to Cultural Celebration. The week of events focus was to enrich the university community by educating and celebrating the many cultures which make up our society.

For an entire week, students were given many options as to what to do and whom to see. For those interested in lectures, the Assembly Series hosted John Jacobs, C.E.O. of the National Urban League. For those students who were more interested in being involved in a discussion, the Multi-cultural forum provided an opportunity for people to come together and discuss cultural and intercultural experiences. The forum featured Professor of history, Bill Lowry.

There were plenty of events in which students were given the chance to sample a different culture without having to leave campus. At the International Coffeehouse held in the Gargoyle, The David Hines

Quartet offered a relaxing evening of jazz while students enjoyed coffee and food from around the world. Another opportunity to taste different cultures came and the International Dinner Theatre. Marriott provided the cuisine of several countries while Latin, African, Native American and Israeli dancers provided the entertainment. For students that still did not get enough food, the Taste of the World brought in special dishes from the four corners of the world, and many places in between.

The week taught students a lot more about different cultures than what kind of food they serve. Other events hosted during the week of Cultural Celebration included the International Fashion Fair, the Film Festival, and the International Bazaar. To top off the week, students kicked off their heels and danced all night at the Caribbean Festival.

AIRBAND

Mothing Out the Words

Airband is the annual lip-synch contest put on by Washington students. No, this was not some second rate show that used a home stereo as a sound system and Radio Shack strobe for its lights. Instead, Airband incorporated a 50,000 watt sound system and 15,000 watts of parcans for a spectacular show of lights and sounds. It was held in the Athletic Complex and rocked the place to the ground.

On Friday, February 2, 1990, the first night of Preliminary Eliminations took place. Some of the favorite bands were The New Originals performing a medley; A Pack O' Lips, Inc. with "Illegal Alien"; and Wait and See with "Everybody Needs Somebody to Love". Some of the favorites of the next evening were Recent Anachronisms performing "Rock and a Hard Place"; Not Adidas with "Pump Up the Jam"; and Banana Surprise with "Venus". Of these, the top five bands from Friday and the top seven bands from Saturday went on to Finals held the following Friday. These twelve bands competed before an audience of over 2,300.

One of the judges, Richard Johnson, Admissions Counselor said: "All of the acts were really well done. I had a very difficult job picking just one winner." Out of 960 possible points, After Midnight, performing "Rhythm Nation" placed first with 821 points, The Gorgeous Ladies of Washington, performing "Simply Irresistible", placed second, and Pair A Dice, performing "Paradise by the Dashboard Lights", came in third. The other placings were Rooty, Tooty, Fresh and Fruity, performing "Ladies Night", Youth in Asia performing "Forever Young", and Cameo performing "You Make Me Say Ow!". David Watermeier, Band Coordinator, said: "It's too bad every band can't win. They all (the bands) put a lot of work and effort into the show."

The show was funded by Student Union, but donations were collected at the door to benefit charity. All proceeds from this year's show went to Youth Emergency Services (Y.E.S.). Y.E.S. is a community-based member of United Way which helps to serve youth in crises: those who are runaways, abused, homeless, or neglected. Some of the services that Y.E.S. provides are a 24-hour hotline, emergency shelter, counseling, and many other helpful programs. Through the student donations, over $3,100 was raised for Y.E.S.

LUNCH HOUR

The Places To Eat

Lunch hour on campus is a stressful and hectic affair. Long lines that aren't worth the food at the end flow out of the Rat, Gargoyle, Deli and Bear's Den. Lack of table space and general claustrophobia push people into the green chair area in Mallinckrodt and into Bowles Plaza in good weather. If you are lucky enough not to have class at 1:00, Cafe a la Carte becomes an attractive option for all meal card users. McMillan is a change of atmosphere. It's generally inconvenient location lends to smaller crowds and Friday lunch dates with unusual table cloths. Holmes Lounge is perfect for all those mealcardless, off campus Fine Art and Architecture students who come up from the depths of Bixby and Givens between studios. Of course Holmes Lounge isn't limited to these students alone. Faculty, visitors, graduates, guitar players and even squirrel feeders frequent the lounge. All in all, it doesn't really matter where you choose to eat because Marriot is inescapable on the Washington University campus.

Just a Child at Heart

The playground behind the Millbrook Apartments served as a wonderful place for students to take a break, relieve stress, and revert back to their childhood for a few hours. They could swing, slide, crawl on and rough things, or just play in the sand. However, something strange happened in the middle of every day. The students appeared to turn into little children. Well, not exactly. It was actually play time at the Washington University Nursery School.

The Washington University Nursery School, located in the Millbrook apartments, served children from the University City and Clayton area. There were three classes in the morning and three in the afternoon for children between the ages of three and five. Education majors as well as work study students devoted their time to the children at the school. Both the Nursery School and the University greatly depended on each other. The young children received their first taste of school in a quality environment, and the students gained valuable experience working with the children.

Carnival Time

Every year, at the end of April, campus parking becomes worse than it usually is. You may wonder why this happens, and the answer is simple: Thurtene. This carnival, organized by the junior men's honorary bearing the same name, was the largest philanthropy held by any group on campus. It attracted not only the entire Washington University student body, but thousands of people from all over the St. Louis area and beyond to the parking lot in front of Brookings. For days before the carnival opened, facades, and game and food booths were constructed by teamed up fraternities and sororities, the Congress of the South Forty, and various organizations and residence halls. Facades competed for awards for the best play, the best structure and the best overall facade which received the coveted Burmeister Cup. Game booths such as pie tossing and food booths selling things like hot dogs and virgin cocktails provided things to do for those who did not wish to see any of the plays. And of course, what carnival would be complete without rides like a ferris wheel? There were rides for both little children as well as those for all of us not so little children.

The one change from the traditional Thurtene Carnival was the time of the carnival. Instead of having the carnival run late into the night of Friday and Saturday, members of Thurtene chose to change the carnival into a Saturday and Sunday daytime event. The reason for this change was that Thurtene members felt that a daytime carnival would be safer as well as more appealing to families in the St. Louis community.

Saving Sociology

The 1989-90 academic year primarily focused on the School of Social Work. On April 10, 1989 Martin Israel, Dean of Faculty, announced his decision to close the sociology department.

Following Israel's decision, based on controversial advice from the Academic Planning Committee, Washington University's faculty and students actively reacted. Forums, speeches, articles, and flyers materialized, gathering support and informing students of their lack of voice and the administration's seemingly quick and easy end of the sociology department.

Counter groups such as "Friends of Sociology," Students for the Preservation of Liberal Arts and the Council of Students of Arts and Sciences moved accordingly to formally protest and reverse Israel's decision.

Resolutions requesting the reversal of the decision were sent to Chancellor William H. Danforth, Dean Israel and David Konig, Chair of the Faculty Council.

A vote describing the faculty's position was initiated at the next faculty meeting. According to Student Union (SU) president, Michael Rothberg, "If there is a strong showing by the faculty that they want to overturn the decision, I am very confident it will be overturned." Students were encouraged to write letters to petition professors to vote in favor of the resolution and to urge friends to take part in counter-activities.

Despite protests by the students, the university decided to go ahead and close the Sociology department and use those resources to improve other curriculums.

Always working

From the outside looking in, G-G-Givens Hall (that evil "G" word that sucks in its students like a black hole, never to surface again) was alive 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The lights were never turned off; in fact, rumor has it that there were no light switches in Givens Hall at all. But remember, all work and no play makes architecture a dull major. There was Happy Hour every Friday afternoon and Bauhaus was a big success, as usual. Curious thing though, one saw these really interesting looking people at Bauhaus and then never anywhere else.

Some words of wisdom from

Brian Hougland, "I Love architecture. If there is anything that I have learned, it is getting things in on time and not procrastinating, especially with papers." Syd McClure comments, "Architecture is my life. Someday I hope to design something similar to EPCOT." The Architecture School straddles the gap between Bixby and the Hilltop Campus, literally and figuratively. It combines the skills of Arts and Sciences and the creativity of Fine Arts. There may not be any Gargoyles looming over the edges of the building, but have you ever noticed the carved cow skulls above the third story windows?

Fun and Work

Dean of Fine Arts, Joe Deal, came to Washington University last August from the University of California, Riverside where he was a professor of photography and Associate Dean of the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. At Riverside he had responsibilities for all sciences and programs including the Visual and Performing Arts.

Deal came to Washington because of the size, quality and "professional orientation of the Fine Arts School." He said that the modest size of the school allows for a rigorous program with a great deal of personal attention that is not possible at larger schools. "We are attracting very bright students, who are committed to work," he said. "The thing that has struck me the most is the friendliness and true sense of community both within the School of Fine Arts, and the larger university."

The Fine Arts Department's dedicated artist/teachers also attracted Deal. He "strongly believes that as teachers or administrators in a school of this kind, you must maintain commitment to your own creative work as well."

His portfolio called the "Fault Zone", which contains pictures of Southern California landscape, was published in 1981, and has been displayed nationally and in Europe. This portfolio and his other work in photography earned him a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1983. He has also received two fellowships from the National Endowment of the Arts. His photographs are in the collections of the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the Metropolitan Museum of New York, the Contemporary Art Museum in Los Angeles, and other major museums across the country.

Fridays free!

Life in the B-school is more than just academics. With classes only Monday through Thursday, students find themselves spending their Fridays in a variety of ways. Some have used them to sleep off their preceding "Rat-nites", others have attended their Arts and Science classes, and even some worked in an internship with local firms.

Thursday afternoons brought Happy-hour, which was a time when students were able to socialize with their professors and administrators in an informal setting, not to mention self-indulgence in free pizza, soda, and beer. Undergraduate students also found themselves integrating with the MBA students who were able to provide insight into some of their "real world" experiences.

And Casino Night, sponsored by the Undergraduate Business School Council, proved to bring out the true money-hungry moguls of the entire Washington University community. Gambling and more gambling was what it all amounted to culminating, with a "door-prize" auction.

Yet, the John M. Olin School of Business also represents schoolwork and has come to serve as home to more than just the "b-schoolers" of campus. It's semi-luxurious library and classroom facilities freely hosted the weary minds of students painfully studying for their classes.

The Olin School of Business: it's not just for finance majors anymore.

TOOHS SCHOOL ENGINEERING

Fun in the Attic

In the engineering school life is a little more hectic than on the rest of campus. Confined to the "engineering corner", engineers have little contact with the rest of campus. Even though engineers find little time in their busy schedules to go out and hang with the rest of the students, they do find time to socialize with each other - especially when working on problem sets together.

There are a plethora of Each of the engineering organizations has its own lounge where members hang out, store their things, or do homework.

These organizations also sponsor activities such as happy-hours and cheap lunches, and field trips to interesting places.

The engineering school also sponsors other activities such as Engineers' weekend, which includes the famous Shepley egg drop, and the Engineering Iron Man, which allowed students to display their beauty, many talents, and geek-potential.

Being an engineer has its other advantages as well. The engineering school is open twenty-four hours a day and it is possible to get to every corner of the school if you know your way around. The building is bustling with activity at all times. No matter what time you are there, people are always present, especially in the Attic, where if nothing else, students can be found playing Tetris.

Although the engineering school has very difficult coursework, there are always other engineers to help or at least offer their sympathies.

More Than Just Exercise

Football, softball, soccer, volleyball, basketball, and many other sports are offered to teams interested in intramural sports. Whether just for fun or for point league, intramural (IM) sports were a lot of fun and could be great entertainment. Friday afternoons seemed to be a popular time for doing non-academic activities, so IM sports were especially popular on Fridays.

We asked around, and found out some very important things about IM sports and our feelings about them. All quotations are anonymous in deference to the seriousness of the topic.

HOW DID YOU GET INVOLVED IN IM SPORTS?

- "My RA signed me up, and I thought it might be fun"
- "One of my friends called me on the phone and said if I didn't play they'd have to forfeit."

—"I thought it would be a great way to meet athletic women."

—"My neighbors said I was a geek."

—"Why not?...I tried everything else."

WHY DO YOU PLAY IM SPORTS?

—"It's a fun way to release the tensions of the week."

—"I enjoy competing with my brothers against other fraternities."

—"My roommate is a referee."

—"It's good exercise and a lot of fun"

—"I get to get muddy."

WHAT SKILLS DO YOU NEED TO PLAY IM SPORTS?

—"None at all, at least the people on my team don't have any!"

—"Patience."

—"Charm, to convince people to play for your team."

—"We practice a lot to be competitive. We all have our own skills."

—"Really strong shorts 'cause the guys in IM football are always trying to tear them off."

WHICH IM SPORT DO YOU LIKE BEST AND WHY?

—"Softball, because one of these years we're going to beat the Bio-dreds."

—"Soccer, because it's fast paced."

—"Intertube waterpolo, because it gives me an excuse to use my waterwings."

—"Football, because we actually won a game this year!"

WORK-STUDY JOBS

Extra Cash

Financial aid for many students came fully or partially in the form of a work-study job. Students filled out interest surveys in the summer and when they got to school they were interviewed for jobs that were somehow connected to their interests. Students could request working in a library, a food place, or wherever they desired. Although these choices were not guaranteed, students usually received one of their top preferences.

Work-study students started at minimum wage, but every additional semester they worked, they received a raise of $.15 per hour. Although many of the jobs were hardly glamorous, some of them, such as working at the Women's Building or the Athletic Complex, allowed students to basically get paid to do their homework. Other jobs, such as research assistants, allowed students to gain valuable experience in their field of study.

BAUHAUS BALL

Dancing German Style

What was there to do on Saturday, October 28? For those who wanted a change of pace from the ever-present fraternity parties, Bauhaus Ball was a pleasant alternative. According to senior Tom Canning, president of the Architecture Student Council, Bauhaus was a school of design that originated in Germany. The theme was "Machine in Industry." The decorations, which were done by sophomore architect students, covered the floors, walls, and ceilings. Commented sophomore Ben Fuqua, "Bauhaus is the most prominent modern movement school of architecture. Bauhaus Ball is a celebration of the design that they've (the German design movement) given us. This year's theme had a lot to do with Bauhaus itself, since Bauhaus was a product of the Industrial Revolution." The coordinator of the event was senior Lisa Kincaid, the design and building of the decorations were done by sophomores in the architecture school. Remarked Canning, "I'm...very pleased with the sophomores, who took the project and ran with it...they were very independent and committed, and did a fabulous job."

Those who attended came dressed only in black and white, or at least were supposed to.

The KWUR deejays played excellent dance music, running the gamut from rap to new wave in order to accommodate the musical tastes of all. Even though the dance space had been expanded from last year, some dedicated partygoers had to resort to dancing on the stairs and even on the back lawn of the building. What did the Bauhaus-goer look like? Aside from the black and white clothing worn by almost everyone, a wide variety of students showed up. Commented sophomore Devon Malone, "There's a refreshing lack of pony-tails tonight, although it's still early." A high turnout of students at the event resulted not only from word of mouth, but also from advertising with t-shirts and poster, these which had also been designed by the sophomores. Even though students may not have grasped the significance of the architectural movement which the organizers of the event were trying to convey, everyone seemed to be having such an excellent time that the party ran later than scheduled. In contrast to Fuqua's view: "Bauhaus is awesome!" Malone summed up the evening by saying, "Bauhaus is simplicity and functionality. We need more of that." Maybe we do.

ASSEMBLY SERIES

Speakers For

Every Wednesday from 11:00 a.m. until 12:00 p.m. crowds gathered in Graham Chapel to hear well known and important people speak in lectures as part of the Assembly Series. To ensure large crowds at these lectures and to make it easier for students to attend them, few classes were scheduled for this time. Speakers and topics ranged from authors of children books and creativity with Maurice Sendak (Where the Wild Things Are) to journalists and the state of the country with Robert McNeil (McNeil-Lehrer News Hour). Whatever ones interests, there was a speaker in the Assembly Series.

Not only was this series open to the entire Washington University community, but also to anyone who was interested in attending. This did however present some problems in that the number of "townies" attending the lectures often forced students who were coming from a class to have to sit in the far back row and even in the balcony., a practice that the administration was trying to change. If you didn't get to the chapel early enough, getting a good seat was next to impossible, but at least the acoustics were good and you could hear the lecture even if you couldn't see who was giving it.

A cting the Part

The Edison Theatre opened its 1989-90 "Touch the Spirit" Ovarions! season with the Market Theatre Company of Johannesburg's production of You Strike the Woman, You Strike the Rock. The extraordinary performance featured the story of three black women making their living by selling chickens and oranges on the outskirts of Capetown, and speaking out against apartheid. The National Theatre of the Deaf visited Edison next, bringing their brilliant production of The Odyssey, a spoken and signed version of Homer's epic tale. The breathtaking, striking and sensual dance of the David Parson's Company earned rave reviews as the Ovarions! series' first dance performance of the year. The semester ended with Serious Fun! from Lincoln Center featuring Frank Maya, Guy Klucsevsek, Scott Johnson, and Charles Moulton.

The Ovarions! for young people series brought the Paul Mesner Puppets, the Little Theatre of the Deaf, the American Indian Dance Theatre, and a production of The Velveteen Rabbit by the Theatreworks Company.

Second Semester began with musical performances from the avant-garde Kronos Quartet and the renaissance stylings of the Waverly Consort. The 26-member troupe of the American Indian Dance Theatre thrilled Edison audiences next with their spectacular costumes, live music, and spirited dancing. Spalding Gray's monologues "Terrors of Pleasure" and "Monster in a Box" filled in when the National Theatre of Great Britain postponed, much to the delight of anyone who saw Mr. Gray's mesmerizing performance. The Kodo Drummers of Japan brought their "One World" tour to the Edison, and the theatre reverberated with the intensity of their drums, bamboo, xylophone, gong, shamisen, and the flute. The next-to-last event was truly special, as Laurie Anderson brought her multi-media mixture of dreams, slides, films, and music in the "Strange Angels" tour. Tickets for this show sold out so quickly that Ms. Anderson agreed to do a third show. The season concluded with the subtle and humorous work of the dancers in Susan Marshall and Company. The Edison Theatre's 1989-90 season provided months of unforgettable evenings for everyone.

This year the ASCE built a lightweight design concrete canoe. The form was made with styrofoam hot-wired to shape, steel reinforcments were attached and then concrete was poured. They invited teams from Oklahoma State University, University of Arkansas, and University of Missouri-Colombia to a race on April 22 at Carondelet Park. Arkansas won the overall competition, while Washington came in third. Unlike previous competitions, where many of the canoes stayed at the bottom of the lake, this year each team got to take their canoes home.

ACADEMIC AND PROFESSIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

The Society of Black Engineers participated in Thurtene with a facade entitled "D'Mansa Musa". The facade had a nightclub feel, with entertainment and talent shows inside, and a cafe set up outside. Many people were attracted to "D'Mansa Musa" by the rap and dance music they played, and the New Orleans style cuisine served at the groups food booth. Member Jonathan Taylor said, "What made it so great was that we were such a small group with little funding, but our idea was great and everyone was really excited and determined to make it work. It brought us together as a group."

CAMPUS MINISTRIES

How do you conquer the stress that builds up just before reading week? Have a party! The second annual Chanukah bash took place in Seconds Please just before reading week began in December. Good music, good friends, and good food added to the party atmosphere. Stress was released and the pressure of finals was temporarily forgotten. The theme "And a great party happened there" was definitely true.

Holmes Lounge, 1980: a woman lay unconscious due to insulin shock. A summoned ambulance did not arrive until thirty minutes later. Two students, both Emergency Medical Technicians, witnessed this scene. They realized that the response time for an ambulance to reach campus was dangerously long. Fortunately the woman was taken to the hospital and was fine, but the two EMTs recognized that maybe the next time, the ambulance would arrive too late.

Hence, a student run emergency response team was formed. Working out of Health Services, under the authority of Dr. Mary Parker, the students acquired the necessary equipment and supplies to run emergency calls. In February of 1980, the SHOut team (Students Helping Out) ran their first call, and arrived in less than five minutes.

The first few years the SHOut team was in existence were difficult. There often were not enough medics on campus, their only vehicle was an old golf cart, and there was little campus support for the organization. Over the years the SHOut team changed its name to the Emergency Support Team, started an EMT class to train new medics, and acquired better vehicles.

The EST has a three member duty crew on call 24-hours a day, seven days a week during the school year. The Medic 1 and Medic 2 are the primary responders and respond to any call. The Medic 3 is a stand-by medic and responds to a call if it is serious, or during a simultaneous call. Medics 1 and 3 are both licenced EMT's while the Medic 2 is certified in first-aid and CPR. New members receive training in classes taught by old members, who are certified first-aid and CPR instructors.

One of the biggest events of the year is the disaster drill. Each year team members work with other Emergency Medical Services to plan a mock disaster. The EST and other EMS organizations use this opportunity to refine their skills at handling a disaster and to test their disaster protocols.

The '89-'90 season has been one of growth and development. They ran over 300 calls, an all time record. They also began teaching weekly CPR classes to students. President Garret Zallen commented: "This year we have more members than we have ever had in the past, we are running more calls and we have taken over more responsibility than ever."

GOVERNING BOARDS

This spring, during Engineer's Weekend, EnCouncil held the Annual Egg Drop Competition. The goal is to build a device that will protect a raw egg in falls from each of the balconies of Shepley Hall. This year's entries ranged from a rice-paper kite to a stuffed Garfield. The competition was judged by Dr. Truman of the Civil Engineering Department and the winners received gift certificates to the campus stores.

What better way to learn about music than to become a KWUR DJ? The campus station, located at 90.3 on the FM dial, has DJ's on the air 24 hours a day during the school year playing all types of music, from new wave, hardcore, ska, funk, and classical, to even the sports show. But the staff is active in other ways: they also DJ parties on and off campus, and arrange shows, such as this year's Ipso Facto concert, and the Kill-dozer concert at Furst Rock. The station also allows students to be a guest DJ. The people who get involved can do it parttime, or get very dedicated and begin organizing concerts and making connections. Freshman Charles Long says, "KWUR is a great way to get involved and expand your musical taste."

...BAND?

"Enthusiastic" is an understatement. "Intensely supportive" only begins to describe their interest in Washington athletics. The Washington Pep Band is an incredible mix of musicians and fans who really enjoy getting people excited. Although the NCAA has recently cracked down on the amount of noise that bands can make during playing time at basketball games, this has not disheartened the group. They are true-blooded Washington fans and they insist on letting the teams know that. At every break in play, they entertain the crowds with a wide range of musical selections. During playing times, when they are restricted from using their instruments to make noise, they cheer and yell along with the rest of the fans.

In the fall, the Pep Band entertains the crowds at the football games. In the spring, they play at both men's and women's home basketball games. In addition, they also participate in Special Olympics. After opening the ceremonies with the National Anthem, they join the rest of the University in one of its most popular, and most fun, philanthropic events of the year.

Like most of the University community, Pep Band has changed over the years. Many renovations were made in 1989 in preparation for President Bush's visit. The leader of the group, Nathan Finch, was contacted about the possibility of pulling a band together to play for the President. The group gladly participated, along with members from other bands on campus. They emerged from the experience having been on national television, having had the experience of working closely with the Secret Service, and having received further campus recognition. The band considers playing for the President a definite highlight in its career.

Funding is a major element in innovation for any musical group and the Pep Band also must limit its changes to what it can afford. In the past the group's budget was very small and they were forced to limit their expenditures to necessities. This meant fewer new musical scores and no real equipment expenditures. Due to recent increases in funding the group has been able to buy more music, livening up its repertoire. New music stands were provided by Student Affairs when the band performed for Bush. But the most important acquisition of the band has been a new keyboard, funded by Student Union and the University. Finally, a new look for the Pep Band, made possible by a new up-to-date Pep Band shirt shows off the groups new image while adding a look of unity to the band.

Interest in the Pep Band has grown over the years. Five years ago the band was composed almost exclusively of engineering students. Under the guidance of Nathan Finch, an alumnus of Washington, the band has grown to approximately thirty members. The students come from engineering, business, and arts and sciences, and range in age from first year students to advanced graduate students. They practice Saturday mornings, and about half of them meet as a class, but it is at games where they really show their true colors.

The Men's Volleyball club team had a successful season this past year, having enough players for two teams. They played in over fourteen tournaments, and even with practicing only two nights a week, they won more than half their games. Besides playing in St. Louis, they traveled to Kansas University and Illinois State University. Their varsity moved from a B ranking to an A ranking in the USVBA. The Women's team had many enthusiastic members, and practiced two times a week as well, but because of snow and a mysteriously disappearing coach, they competed in few tournaments.

...WOMEN'S WEEK?

Women's Week on the Washington University campus began two years ago as a small effort to raise awareness of women's achievements and participation in history. As it grows larger each year, the Women's Week Committee encounters new challenges in their efforts. Their hopes are that in the future the group will tackle the complex task of incorporating inclusivity and diversity into the celebration of Women's Week. Their attempts to do so this year included the performance of "A Perfect Fifth", a women's woodwind quintet which plays classical music composed by women. The main speaker for the celebration was Harriet Woods, former Lieutenant Governor of Missouri, who spoke on the political role of women in the nineties. Local poet Shirley LeFlore, whose poetry is written for and about the African-American women's experience, was also invited. Two informal talks on women's health issues, and a film series were held as well. The week ended with a panel of international women on campus, who discussed women's issues in their respective countries.

On November 17, 1989, Ashoka sponsored a party to celebrate the return home of Lord Ram from his fourteen year jungle exile. This celebration is known as Diwali -- the festival of lights. The party was held in the Gargoyle where traditional Indian food was served. A live D.J. provided music to augment the festive atmosphere of the celebration.

What do a large yellow tiger, the Gargoyle, and a live D.J. have in common? They were all involved in the Association of Korean Students Dance held on December 2, 1989. The tiger was painted in the underpass as an advertisement for the event. The dimly lit Gargoyle was filled with loud music and people blowing off steam in preparation for the pre-final crunch. AKS provided plenty of snacks to keep everyone's energy levels up so they could keep dancing.

HONORARIES

To most people, Thurtene is just a big carnival that takes place during April. However, there is a lot more to the carnival than meets most people's eyes. Selection for this special group begins first semester. Junior men go through many interviews and activities, all of which are very secret. By second semester, a group of thirteen men is chosen, all of whom have displayed community and campus involvement of some sort. Once the members are chosen and given their yellow jacket, the real work begins.

Members of Thurtene are responsible for all aspects of the carnival. They most arrange for the rides, all necessary equipment, and people to run the carnival. They are responsible for all finances, choosing an appropriate charity, and safety and security on The Lot.

Football's Best Since 1984

The Bears End With A 4-5 Record.

Washington University, by winning their final three games of the season, finished the 1989 campaign at 4-5--their best record since 1984. Five of the six players named to the all-UAA team were defensive players for the Bears. On that list were senior linebackers Ken Wittmer and Doug Storm. Washington University's other all-conference picks included junior punter Eric Nyhus, sophomore cornerback Stacey Hightower, and freshman free safety Michael Lauber. Offensively, the lone Bear to garner all UAA mention was junior wideout Steve McRae.

"Overall, we raised our level of play on a week-to-week basis this season," said Bears' head coach Larry Kindbom, "We saw improvement in all areas of our game this season. Our kicking game, which was one of our strengths right from the beginning, continued to get better. We became more aggressive defensively...Some of our skilled players really matured quickly over the year." Statistically, the numbers show the Bears' improvement in 1989. The 164 points allowed by the defense was the lowest point total in 10 seasons. And despite the inexperience of the offense, Washington University scored more points this season than they did in any of the previous four. The Bears also earned their first shut-out and scored their largest margin of victory since 1984.

In the turnover department, the Bears turned in a plus-seven; in the takeaway/giveaway department, 33 to 26. Last year, Washington trailed in the same category by 11 turnovers. The Bears' defensive secondary which picked off 19 passes, held the opposition to 113.6 yards per game in the air and just four passing touchdowns in nine games. The Bears did not allow a touchdown in the air in their final four games. Possibly the most encouraging sign for 1990 is the 15 to 20 returning seniors. Says Kindbom: "You win with seniors. The stronger the senior class, the better the football team. Next year's senior class needs to set the tone for next season throughout the offseason."

A Share of the UAA Title

Men's Soccer is Co-Champions

Washington University, by winning their final nine games of the season, captured a share of the UAA title with a 6-1 league record and a 15-4 mark overall.

Five Bears were honored by the University Athletic Association for their individual accomplishments. Headlining the Bear's list of all-UAA picks was senior Chris Scaglione, who was named a first-team choice by the league's coaches, along with junior forward Paul Wright, who led the Bears in scoring this season. Named to the second team were senior midfielder Andy Sterioff, senior defender Garrett Gregg, and freshmen defender Matt Holmes.

By defeating nationally ranked Emory University, the Bears earned a share of the conference title with Emory and Rochester, despite playing over half the game a man down. Said Coach Ty Keough, "Our 15-4 record indicates that 1989 was a different than '88, in terms of commitment and talent. We achieved many of our goals -- improving on last year's performance and winning a share of the conference title."

Despite finishing the season with the school's sixth best record in 29 years, the Bears couldn't secure one of the NCAA Division III Great Lakes region's top four berths. After suffering crippling losses to DePauw University and University of Rochester, the Bear's nine-game winning streak during October pushed the Bear's to a ranking of fifth in the region, but no higher. Still, the 1989 season on a positive note and Keough is enthusiastic about next year's season.

"We had a solid performance from so many players this season," said Keough. "A number of freshmen had good seasons, and that's always a good indicator for the future. Outside of not receiving a bid to the NCAA tournament, this season had very few disappointments."

Battled 2 Teams in the UAA

Women's Soccer Posts 4-5 Record

After one season of official varsity competition, the women's soccer team appears to have laid the foundation for a program which will rival the men's.

In their inaugural season, head coach Doug Hippler's squad posted a 4-5 record. In University Athletic Association play, the Bears battled two of the league teams, defeating University of Chicago and losing the second-place Emory University in overtime.

"I was really pleased with what we accomplished this year," said Hippler. "When you build a new program you're dealing with a lot of different personalities and a new coach, and your biggest challenge is to make it work. I felt we did that this season and progressed from day one."

"We only played nine games this season, and to have as many practices as we did in between games could have been counterproductive, but the players responded, remaining enthusiastic and motivated throughout the course of the season. Talent-wise, it's evident this team has a great deal of potential. We have some areas we know we have to improve in, but we plan to take care of that off-season with our recruiting."

Freshmen defender Kristi Kohls led the team in scoring with three goals and three assists. Sophomore Ashley Howell scored three goals and one assist as did sophomore midfielder Honor Woodard. In goal, junior Kim Kaufman made the mid-season transition to her new collegiate position and came away with respectable numbers -- 1.20 goals against average and one shutout.

"This group showed a lot of dedication," said Hippler. "Probably, more than anything, that was the number one thing I was looking for from this team -- their desire and motivation to have a successful program. We have the potential to become very competitive with the best teams in our league and within our region."

Exercising Indoors

An Escape From the Rain

For exercising enthusiasts, nothing was better than working up a sweat while soaking in the sun and breathing fresh air. For most people, the beautiful spring day just called to people to enjoy some form of physical activity outdoors. However, while it was much more exciting to run or play hoops outside, Mother Nature was not always cooperative.

Just because there was a downpour, or eight inches of slushy-snow, or absolutely unbearable heat was not a reason to give up all forms of exercise. For those students who were still determined to burn off a little frustration, there was the Athletic Complex, complete with a weight room, racquetball and squash courts, a swimming pool, and the Rec Gym.

The Rec Gym was big enough to support several games of basketball and volleyball at one time. In addition, there was an indoor track, about half the size of the outdoor track, which circled the gym. This gave dedicated runners a chance to jog no matter what the weather was like.

Facing Quite a Challenge

Women First, Men Third in UAA

"We're definitely a blue-collar team. Our rosters are filled with a bunch of hard-working people who have some ability - and, more importantly, the desire to get the most out of it." These were the words used by cross country coach Charlie Gatti to describe his team. The Bears faced quite a challenge in 1989 after coming off an incredible 1988 season with a team described as Washington University's best ever. Three of the Bears' top five runners were lost due to graduation. Despite that loss, both the men's and women's teams were ranked 20th in Division III preseason polls. WU went on to win the first five meets of the season, proving that this was a team to be reckoned with and perhaps as good as the one before it. At the first meet, the Lincoln Land Invitational, both squads swept win, place, and show honors. At the Cougar Classic, Dave Watkins and Karen Sorenson earned medalist honors and Sorenson set a five kilometer course record. The Bears went on to dominate the competition on their home turf at the Washington University Quadrangular. Karen Sorenson and Dave Watkins earned medalist honors for the fourth and third times respectively. These results did not go unnoticed, as both squads moved up in the rankings. The women climbed first to the 18th spot, and then to the 14th spot. The men moved up from 20th to 18th.

Victors Over National Powers

Good, Aggressive Basketball

The 1989-90 Washington University men's basketball team posted a 17-9 overall record, closing out the year with a five game winning streak. In spite of victories over national powers Emory, DePauw, Rochester, and Illinois Wesleyan, however, the Bears did not make the NCAA Division III tournament for the first time in four seasons. A four-week stretch of inconsistency cost the Bears a shot at the UAA title; the Bears and Emory had been expected to battle it out for the conference championship. A couple of points here and there would have landed the Bears a post-season tourney spot, since four of their six conference losses were by a total of nine points. "When it became obvious that our post-season hopes were, for all practical purposes, gone, we showed a lot of character and pride, and played good, aggressive basketball the three final weeks of the season," said coach Mark Edwards. "There's no doubt in my mind we could have been competitive in the tourney...hopefully these are lessons that we can carry into next season." The Bears return three starters for the 1990-91 campaign, and if they can pull out some more close games they will certainly contend for the UAA title.

Women's Basketball Has Perfect 14-0 Conference Record

The Washington University women's basketball team earned the right to host the NCAA Division III Central Regional because of their 25-1 regular season record. Having won the UAA title with a perfect 14-0 conference record, the Bears were named the top seed in the Central region. The Bears finished up the 1989-90 regular season with an 18 game winning streak, ending the campaign ranked third in the national poll. Though their two national tournament games were heart-breaking losses, the Bears had an amazing season as they won the conference title for the third time.

In the days that followed the two losses, a number of accolades poured in, helping to salve the Bear's wounds. Senior Rochelle Meyers, junior Karen Hermann, and Sophomore Michele Lewis were named to the UAA's All-Association First team. Additionally, Hermann and Meyers were candidates for All-Central Regions honors, and Hermann was selected as a second-team GTE Academic All-America pick, after earning third-team honors a year ago. For the second time in three seasons, Head Coach Nancy Fahey and Assistant Coach Bill Shapiro were voted by their peers as UAA coaching staff of the year.

The Bears will have three starters back next fall, losing only two seniors, and will push to retain the UAA title and advance farther in the national tourney.

Volleyball Bears are #1

Team Takes Division III Championship

It was more than an amazing season. While the Washington University Volleyball team did play incredibly well all season long, that is not what made the 1989-90 school year special. In addition, the fact that the Bears finished the season with a 39-7 record is still not the most amazing part of the year. The one thing that the players, the fans, and all of the school will always remember was that the 1989-90 season was the one in which the Bears won the first UAA Division III National Championships.

As the end of the season approached, excitement filled the school as the team waited for a bid to the championships. Not only were the Bears in the running for the Championship title, but it was announced that the playoffs would be held at Washington University. By the last night, enthusiasm and support had so overwhelmed the entire campus that there was not an empty seat to be found in the stands. With the support of the whole school, the Volleyball team dominated the playoffs, going 13-0 in conference play.

Not only did the team triumph, but so did individual members. Lori Nishikawa became the first Division III player in history to win the award of UAA Player of the Year. Nishikawa was also given the title of AVCA and Reebok Player of the Year and was named to First Team All-UAA. Along with Nishikawa, Brooke Hortin and Kathy Berseff were also named First Team All-UAA, and Kristi Owen was named Second Team. Nishikawa, Hortin, and Berseff were also named All-Midwest Region and All-American. Teri Clemens won the titles of Central Region Coach of the Year and Reebok National Coach of the Year. Together, Joe Worlund and Clemens also were honored by being named UAA Coaching Staff of the Year.

Bears Shine at Nationals

Swimming and Diving Crack Top-Twenty

Leaving a trail of shattered school records in their wake, the Washington University swimming and diving teams capped their finest season ever by cracking the top twenty at the NCAA Division III Championships for the first time in the history of the program. The men's team finished 16th at its meet, held in Brown Deer, Wis., while the women's team finished 17th in Williamstown, Mass.

After the Bears combined for a 15-2 dual meet record, won a pair of invitational titles, and finished strong in the highly competitive University Athletic Association championships, 11 team members extended the season by qualifying for the nation meets. The Red and Green contingent of five men and six women was the largest in school history.

On the women's side, the Bears' efforts were led by a pair of All-American selections: junior Jennifer Collins and sophomore Becky Hanking. Also qualifying in individual events were senior Chris Look and freshman Tory Peters. Qualifying and competing as members of Bear relays were junior Kristin Murphy and freshman Jennifer Schulenberg.

On the men's side, all five Bear competitors took home honorable mention All American honors--two for individual events and the other three for relays. These five men were senior Stephen Henry, senior Karl Degenhardt, senior Boadie Dunlop, senior Steve Wisser, and sophomore Pete Eby. Not only did these men bring home many honors, but they also combined to demolish eight varsity records in the process.

Sweating It Out

The Weight Room Has A Workout For All

Deep in the basement of the Athletic Complex, there lies a room that is feared by some people, and worshiped by others. It is the infamous weight room.

There were those students who knew of the weight room by reputation only. For those students, the only curls that they were interested in was curling the phone to their ears to call Domino's. The only benches they wanted to sit on were park benches.

In contrast to these students, there were those students who lived in the athletic complex. For these people, a day was not complete without a two-hour workout. This workout included just about every piece of equipment and every barbell, and worked more muscles than the average person ever used.

Somewhere between these two groups of students were the casual jocks. While these students were not obsessed with the weight room, they did frequent it regularly to keep their bodies in shape and to relieve tension.

No matter who was interested, the weight room had something for everyone. From free weights to machine weights to stationary bikes, the weight room provided all students with whatever workout they desired.

Track & Field Take Honors

Men Take the Title, Women Place Fourth

Continuing their mastery over the rest of the conference, the Washington University men's track and field team took top honors at the University Athletic Association outdoor championships, held in Atlanta, GA. This win made it so the Bears had won each of the three annual UAA outdoor title, as well as monopolizing all three indoor league championships.

The women's track and field team, hurt by injuries and late roster scratches, managed to have stay strong and had an amazing end to their season, finishing fourth behind surprise winner Emory University. In the previous two UAA outdoor meets, the women Bears had placed second.

The UAA Indoor Individual Champions included Dave Smith (Outstanding Male Athlete-Long Jump, Triple Jump, and High Jump), Marc Bader (Pole Vault), Robert Lindsey (800 meters), Tim Walker (Shot Put and 35-pound Weight), Darrick Warfield (55 meters and 200 meters). The women champions were Karen Sorensen (3,000 meters and 5,000 meters), and Shannon Huffman (Shot Put).

The UAA Outdoor Individual Champions included Ron Champagne (400 meter hurdles), Allen Glenn (Shot Put and Hammer Throw), Dave Smith (Long Jump), Darrick Warfield (100 meters), Dave Watkins (10,000 meters), and Karen Sorensen

(3,000 meters and 5,000 meters).

The 1990 National Qualifiers were Robert Lendsey, Allen Glenn, Karen Sorensen, Tim Walker, D.P. Rajhansa, Dave Watkins, and Susan Culican. In addition, Tim Walker was named 1990 All-American for the hammer throw.

Another honor was bestowed on the women's team as senior Karen Sorensen was chosen as a second-team member of the 1990 GTE Academic All-America At-Large women's team for the College Division (NAIA, NCAA Division II and III). Sorensen was one of only 30 women to be honored with Academic All-American status by the College Sports Information Directors of America.

Baseball Bears Defeat UMSL

Three Players Receive Awards

Despite a loss of momentum at the end of the year's campaign, the Washington University Baseball team defeated nationally ranked University of Missouri-St. Louis in an upset victory. The baseball program, being rebuilt by new head mentor Kevin Benzing, featured five first-year players. Because of the youth and inexperience, the Bears were troubled by inconsistency, but Benzing expects the team to be better within a few years. "A lack of solid depth at most positions really caused us some problems this year," said Benzing, "but we were more aggressive. We defended the run much better, allowing about 40 less stolen bases. And our strikeout to walk ratio for the pitching staff was significantly improved. In the outfield I was really pleased with our play."

After leading the team in batting average, sophomore Steve Melnick picked up Most Valuable Player, leading the team in hitting despite an early-season hamstring injury and a mid-season hitting slump. Being lauded as the team's 1990 Rookie of the Year, newcomer left fielder John Tanner led all freshmen in hitting and fielding percentage.

Besides hurling the most innings and starting the most games this season, team captain and senior Ron Wilwert is the recipient of the Bear's most prestigious post-season honor, the Leo Kelly Award. The award is presented annually to a baseball player who has demonstrated the qualities of the former coach, teacher, and administrator - dedication, enthusiasm, and competitive spirit.

At the start of the 1990 season Benzing established three goals for his team: instill more pride in the program, play hard every inning, and establish a good work ethic. Benzing saw progress in all areas: "We have a large incoming class of players next season, many of whom are pitchers, and I think this will help speed our recovery. I'm looking forward to the future, and restoring the winning tradition of Washington University baseball."

Young But Tough Golf Takes Top Honors

The Washington University Men's Golf Team closed out the 1990 season by taking top honors at the rain-shortened Principia College Triangular. The young Bears, with no seniors on the season's roster, relied on a pair of freshmen and two sophomores at Principia. The freshmen, Jimmy Lewis and Phil Boggess, each registered nine-hole totals of 40, while the sophomores, Andrew Kleine and John McIntosh, both carded totals of 41. The team's total of 162 outdistanced Principia College by three strokes and MacMurray College by 17 strokes.

According to Head Coach Chris Gianoulakis, "We showed signs of greatness at times and we played like we were very young at other times. All our potential is out in front of us."

A Swingin' Season

Men's Tennis Ranks Third

The Men's Tennis Team had a strong season during the 1989-90 school year. The team finished with a good 11-8 record. The team further proved themselves by ranking 3rd in the UAA Championships.

In addition to a superb finish by the team, there were several great individual finishes. The team had one UAA champion, Niraj Sehgal, who was ranked Number-six Singles. Dan Freedman was the Number-two Singles Consolation champion. In addition, Mudd teamed up with Jason Mudd to win the Number-one Doubles Consolation Championship, while David Williams and John Parks received the Number-two Doubles Consolation champion title. Mudd was ranked Number-one Singles, and advanced to the quarterfinal round. Mudd was ranked 12th nationally in the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association poll, and compiled a 35-25 career singles record at Washington University, playing a majority of those matches as the Bears' number one player.

Victors in Last 11 Matches

Women's Tennis Sports a 12-2 Record

Victors in their last eleven matches of the season, The Washington University Women's Tennis Team concluded the fall portion of their schedule with a sparkling 12-2 record. The Bears closed out the autumn slate with a 5-4 win over Ripon College, which was ranked 29th nationally in the final I.T.C.A. Division III poll earlier in the spring, and a 9-0 whitewashing of Division I University of Illinois-Chicago. The Red and Green were strong at the top against Ripon, with sophomores Debbie Michelson and Veronica Cherniak dropping only a combined seven games in straight-set conquests. Junior Jenny Wheelock helped provide the margin of victory by winning her number-four singles match in a third-set tie-breaker. The Bears pounced on Illinois-Chicago, winning all eight-ensets and conceding only eighteen games in all. According to Head Coach Lynn Imergoot, "We made the transition from being a decent team to a good team. Despite our inexperience and despite some injuries, we beat some good, competitive teams rather easily. The most pleasing wins were against Wheaton and Ripon. They were both nationally ranked last year, so we know we're on that level...The main difficulty I had this fall was finding playing time for fourteen talented people." The Bears continued to show their strength through the end of the spring season. Sophomore Debbie Michelson and junior Alison Browstein went on to compete in the NCAA Division III National Championships.

GREEKS

Women's Panhellenic Association

The year was best described by the word transition, as the Women's Panhellenic Association underwent several changes. Members of Panhel spent the year preparing for the onset of deferred rush as well as the colonization of a new chapter, Delta Gamma.

First semester took on the theme of education, as the Panhellenic Association addressed the challenges facing many Greek systems across the country. After a very successful fall rush, in conjunction with the Intra-Fraternity Council, Panhel coordinated a Greek Awareness Program (GAP) for the newest members of the Greek system. Some of the topics discussed included alcohol awareness, the right to say "no", sexual harassment, and a pledge's responsibility as a member of a fraternity or sorority.

An internal Deferred Rush Task Force addressed various concerns including a limited fall semester rush, and financial hardship. Panhel also donated funds for the publishing of a pamphlet about date rape put out by CORE. Socially, the sorority system gathered for a fun evening at the Marriott downtown, where Panhel Formal was held on December first.

Second semester brought the successful colonization of Delta Gamma with 90 new and exciting members. In addition to aiding in the formation of the new sorority, Panhel sponsored an open house evening for the Delta Gamma members to better acquaint themselves with the other sororities as well as the executive council.

Philanthropy was a major part of the activities throughout the year. The Junior Panhellenic, which is composed of members of the sorority pledge classes, made Valentine Cards that were distributed at Children's Hospital. Also, Panhel planned a clothing drive at the end of the year, just when students were doing their "end of the year" cleaning. The spring also included the annual Adele Starbird Awards Banquet which honored Beth Adelman and Jillian Zacks as outstanding senior women.

Alpha Epsilon Phi

The Psi Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Phi had a busy sixty-fifth year. They started the year with forty-six amazing pledges. Homecoming with Phi Delta Theta, a roadtrip to visit the AEPHs at the University of Illinois, a Luau set-up party, to name a few activities, rounded out the first semester.

Second semester was just as busy. The first annual Jail-A-Thon found many campus personalities, as well as tons of AEPHs, behind bars to raise over $650 for the American Cancer Society. A fabulous Spring Formal at City Hall, funnel cakes and Ted Drewes with Sigma Nu at Thurtene Carnival, and W.I.L.D. with ZBT highlighted second semester.

Jailed For Money

On March 23, the Gargoyle came alive, buzzing with pseudo-criminals, bail posters, and AEPHs, all for one purpose - to raise money for the American Cancer Society.

Various student leaders and other campus personalities, as well as a few professors, donated their time to be "locked up" in wood cells. The prisoners then pleaded with their friends, classmates, and other students to post their bail.

However, many of the pleas were drowned out by the live entertainment by several campus bands such as The Pedestrians. Under the supervision and direction of Philanthropy Chair Stefanie Juster and Assistant Chair Jessica Matka, Alpha Epsilon Phi was able to raise over $650 for the American Cancer Society.

Alpha Phi

The Zeta Upsilon chapter of Alpha Phi had another terrific year. After an exciting Rush, quota was filled, and everyone joined in for the year's first event of building the Homecoming float with Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity to the theme of "Good Vibrations."

Once again Alpha Phi was very active with philanthropies. They concentrated on trying to help and entertain underprivileged children. The Christmas party with Sigma Phi Epsilon, the day at the zoo and the Easter egg hunt were fun for everyone. The pledges helped fix up a shelter for needy families and did a phone-a-thon to help the program. They sponsored a basketball team at the Special Olympics and cheered on the participants.

Alpha Phi also had a terrific time at all of the social functions during the year. The seniors kicked off the social calendar with a great western senior party. Later, the pledges followed tradition and threw a party for the rest of the sorority. The winter 'set-up' semi-formal was a tremendous success, followed by a terrific spring formal where everyone "had a ball." For the third consecutive year, they built a facade with Sigma Phi Epsilon for Thurtene.

Alpha Phi was honored by Panhel with the highest grade point average award and senior Jillian Zacks was the co-winner of the prestigious Delta Starr award.

In Many Colors

One thing's for sure: the Alpha Phis sure know how to have a good time. It certainly didn't take the ETA Pledge class a long time to figure this out. In fact, first hand accounts confirmed that the 1989 Pledge Class Party, Alpha Phi Kalliedoscope, was the best party Alpha Phi's can remember.

Sporting a colorful theme, pledge class members planned, prepared, and executed an incredible night of festivities for this annual Alpha Phi bash - a tradition that helps incorporate new pledges into the chapter. Coinciding with the last day of classes, Alpha Phi Kalliedoscope was the perfect night to live it up. Decorated in the brightest colors of the spectrum, Umrath was hopping, the Alpha Phi pledges were styling, and every guest was jammin' to the funky Alpha Phi beat. Yes, the 1989 Alpha Phi pledge class party was definitely one for the record books.

Alpha Chi Omega

Alpha Chi Omega is more than just a sorority; it is a family unified through friendship and spirit. The Alpha Zeta chapter had a great year, beginning with Rush and continuing with Greek week, Sigma Nu Relays, Homecoming, Derby Days, and finishing off with Thurtene Carnival and WILD. Interspersed in all of these fun activities were mixers, parties, and philanthropies — all of which were greatly enjoyed by many. Alpha Chis are big achievers, and their record shows it. Besides having the highest pledge class G.P.A., hard work paid off in winning the Greek week Spirit Sing-Off, and Sigma Nu Relays. Individually, there were Alpha Chis in other campus activities including Student Union, various campus honories, and varsity sports, just to name a few.

Alpha Chi Omega brought its members together in a way that no other organization could. The time spent working on sorority events, or even just talking and getting to know one another made the experience much more special. Alpha Chi provided memories and friendships that will last a lifetime.

AXO Helping Others

This year Alpha Chi Omega participated in many philanthropies in the St. Louis area. During wintertime, the pledge class donated their time by working at Santa's Workshop, a store at St. Louis Centre run by Children's Hospital to raise funds for the care of children who could not afford it.

Another philanthropy was bowling with handicapped children on a Sunday afternoon. Alumni of Alpha Chi joined the active members for a day of fun and excitement. In addition, Alpha Chi's made scratch and sniff books for children at Barnes Hospital. Special Olympics was a great experience, as well as the IFC Easter Egg Hunt in which the sorority joined forces with Sigma Chi.

Delta Gamma

The history of Delta Gamma on the Washington University campus is far from modern. In fact, the Alpha Epsilon chapter was initiated originally on April 27, 1914. The chapter flourished until the Vietnam War produced feelings of anti-establishment on many college campuses. Thus, in 1974, Delta Gamma responded to the lack of interest in Greek life by pulling Alpha Epsilon's charter.

In the early 1980's, sentiment changed and a renewed interest necessitated more sororities. Only four chapters had remained on campus from the 1970's. The university requested the chartering of more sororities, which were accepted one at a time to allow for proper adjustment.

After gaining university approval in 1986, Delta Gamma received the rights to the next open sorority spot. When Gamma Phi Beta removed its charter at the end of 1988, Delta Gamma prepared to return to campus.

On February 2, the new Alpha Epsilon chapter began colonization by filling quota. On May 5, the chapter was installed officially when 86 pledges became the newest members of the Delta Gamma Fraternity.

Colonization

For most sororities, pledges come into the chapter ready to learn all they can from the actives. To help integrate them into the chapter, pledges are given one active, their Pledge Mom, to guide them through pledgeship. However, since this was the recolonization of Delta Gamma, there were no actives to show pledges the ways of the sorority. Instead of a Pledge Mom, each pledge was given an alumnae, known as their Aunt Hannah. In addition, each pledge was paired up with another pledge in Delta Gamma, known as their "Twin Sister." The support system proved effective as the newest sorority chapter on campus became very active and well integrated into the Greek system.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Kappa Alpha Theta, reinstated at Washington University four years ago, experienced changes of great magnitude. In the spring of 1990, they sadly said good-bye to the last of their charter members, feeling sure that they could teach new pledges the high ideals that the close-knit group of Seniors set.

As well as the routine changes that every sorority sees year after year, such as taking in new members and seeing off old ones, the Thetas faced new challenges and tried new things. For example Kappa Alpha Theta's national office chose a new philanthropy this year: Court

Appointed Special Advocates, CASA. Washington University's chapter started a new tradition, The Theta Treasure Hunt, in order to raise money for CASA. The pledge class Service project, "Breakfast in Bed," raised money for CASA by sending breakfasts to anyone in the South Forty, Fraternity Row, and Millbrook Apartments.

Over these past four years Theta has grown incredibly. No longer the, "new kids on the block," they welcomed their new neighbors, Delta Gamma, to campus. At the same time, they continued to work and take pride in their united sisterhood.

Newly initiated Thetas Molly Seed, Valori Lunford, and Maria Sceruzzi smile broadly.

Treasure Hunt

On October 28, 1989 the Alpha Iota chapter held its first annual Treasure Hunt for Charity. The event, open to participants from the entire Washington University campus, was a great success. A total of nineteen teams, ranging in size from two to five members, enjoyed an afternoon of friendly competition and free pizza, provided by Dominoes. The first prize of $250 was donated by the winning Theta Xi team to their fraternity's philanthropy. Second prize, won by an SAE team, consisted of tickets to an Edison Theater production and T-shirts.

The chapter, through an incredible group effort and organization, succeeded in raising a total of $380 for the St. Louis County chapter of Court Appointed Special Advocate, CASA, the new national philanthropy for Theta, is an organization dedicated to providing legal services for needy children.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

With forty-six new and enthusiastic pledges, Kappa Kappa Gamma began the 1989-1990 school year with a promising future ahead. They started with a successful Halloween philanthropy with Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. As Homecoming approached Kappas teamed up with Kappa Sigma Fraternity in "pumping" the first place Homecoming float. Kappas also took the win in Sigma Chi Derby Days, but exhibited their real athletic talent as intramural champions in soccer, football, and swimming. Late into the school year they still held a strong first-place intramural lead on their way to becoming I.M. champions.

Starting second semester Kappas plunged right into their annual chapter elections. The new officers have a big job preparing for the 1990-91 school year's deferred Spring rush. Yet, while review of policies and new programming became a primary issue, Thurtene seeped into Kappas' minds. By the end of March, they set to work and had a lot of fun and many late nights with Theta Xi Fraternity in preparation for their facade.

Flapper dresses came back into style as the Kappas prepare for their next rush party.

More Than Exercise

What does it take to become an authentic St. Louisian? Well the 1990 Kappa Kappa Gamma pledge class could tell you. On Saturday December 2, 1989, approximately forty pledges walked seven miles from Washington University's Brookings Arch to the St. Louis Arch in order to raise money for The Women's Crisis Center in Bellville, Illinois. Each participant enlisted friends, roommates, and relatives to pledge at least 25 cents or more per mile, then began the walk at noon on that chilly, December day.

The pledge class chose The Women's Crisis Center because they wanted to support a lesser known charity for women that could really benefit from a monetary donation. The philanthropy ended as a great success, raising over $1,200 for the center, and bringing the pledge class closer together.

Pi Beta Phi

The first national women's fraternity on the Washington University campus, the Missouri Betas have always been a strong force in the community. On March 22, 1907, twelve pioneering young women received their charter and began to build Pi Beta Phi into a sorority based on mental, moral, and social standards.

Mentally, the Pi Phi excelled in many different areas. Pi Phi majored in everything from Biology to Business to Architecture to Engineering to Psychology, to name a few fields. With the help of study hours for pledges, test files, study buddies, and study breaks to relieve tension, Pi Phi stood out with an average G.P.A. of 3.2.

Pi Beta Phi strived to be an asset to both the community and the campus. They bowled with Sigma Phi Epsilon to raise money for the Leukemia Society of America, and took underprivilege to the zoo and to basketball games. Pi Phi also took on many different costumes to entertain kids. For halloween, Pi Phi joined forces with Sigma Chi to put on a haunted house, and for Christmas, they dressed up as cartoon characters to help local alumnae put on the annual "Lunch With Santa."

Throw a Pie At a Pi Phi

In celebration of the last week of classes, Pi Beta Phi held the first annual Pi Beta Phi Pie Toss. The pie toss allowed students and faculty members to release stress and tension by throwing chocolate pudding and whipped cream pies at Pi Phis yelling "Take your best shot!"

The purpose of the event was to raise money for the Pi Beta Phi national philanthropy - Arrowmont School of Arts and Crafts. Founded in 1912 and located in the mountainous regions of Gatlinburg, TN, Arrowmont is a settlement school which provides elementary and secondary education and trade skills to those who would not normally be able to receive such an education. The local residents use the skills learned at Arrowmont to produce clay, metal, glass, fabric, wood and paper works which are sold in over 200 cities across the nation.

A Night On The Row

Susie Student was hanging out in her room, trying to decide what she wanted to do for the night. Suddenly, in burst some of her friends from across the hall to remind her that some fraternities were having parties on the row that night.

"After spending ten seconds convincing her how great the parties would be that night, everyone left so that Susie could put herself together in five minutes. She threw on Levi's, a white t-shirt, and "row-going" shoes (mud covered, that is). She collected her student I.D. (just in case she did not know any of the Patrol Guards), meal card (just in case the Bear's Den was still open when she got back), and a couple of bucks (just in case). She stashed her keys in her back left pocket, and was ready to go.

Her friends came back around 10:30 p.m., a little early for the "row scene," but they were anxious to start partying. They passed the crime-fighting Blue Lights on the way to the infamous underpass for one last glance at the parties that night. There were several houses having parties, and several others which were having mixers, sure to open up around midnight.

Slowly, Susie Student and her friends made their way down the Row, stopping at each house to check out the dancing scene, see who was there, and grab a drink for the walk to the next house. Normally, it would take any student about one minute to walk from the Beta house to the Phi Delt house. But at night, it turned into a two hour trip because every five feet someone saw a friend that they just had to say hi to, or heard a song that they just had to dance to. By the time Susie and her friends reached the Phi Delt house, it was well after midnight and the group was about half of its original size. The remaining few took one last look around before braving the infamous stairs leading down to the AEPI and Sig Ep house. After another hour or so below the Row, Susie and her friends regrouped and backtracked up the treacherous stairs, back down the row, through the underpass, around Wohl (which closed at 1 a.m.), up into their respective rooms, and straight into bed, where they dreamt of out-of-control parties full of people and fun.

Intra-Fraternity Council

The Intra-Fraternity Council, the coordinating body of the twelve fraternities on campus, continued to establish itself as a strong mainstay for providing and improving campus social life along with raising campus awareness and organizing charitable events.

After a successful fall rush, IFC combined forces with the Women's Panhellenic Council to put on an outstanding Greek Week. During this time, IFC and Panhel strived for one goal: to bring unity to both the greek system and the entire campus. The overwhelming favorite activity was the sing-off where fraternities and sororities took turns to see who could sing the loudest, the prettiest, and with the most spirit. The sing-off provided friendly competition and fun for everyone, despite the chilling weather. The week ended with a huge bash, open to all students. Both greek and non-greek students danced all night at some place other than the Row for a change.

In keeping with tradition, the Intra-Fraternity Council placed great importance on philanthropic events. Fraternities were encouraged to provide services and raise money for charitable causes. In addition, members on the executive council organized one main event to help others while bringing members of different fraternities together. At the end of October, IFC arranged for buses to bring children to the Row for a halloween surprise. Fraternities joined forces with some of the sororities to redecorate the fraternity houses into haunted houses. When the children arrived, volunteers took the kids from house to house for lots of tricks, and of course, even more treats.

The year ended with an awards banquet to recognize outstanding fraternity men for their accomplishments and hard work for both the university and the St. Louis community.

Alpha Epsilon Pi

The Sigma chapter of Alpha Epsilon Pi strongly moved forward into a new decade by showing prominence on campus and in the St. Louis community. Adding a solid new pledge class of thirteen members to the already strong brotherhood, the Sigma chapter illustrated its commitment to finding exceptional individuals. AEPi took the lead by bringing the bowling championship home, and excelling in football and softball. The superlative "egg out the window" throwing earned great honors, also.

As expected, Sigma Chapter represented the ultimate in the undisciplined party experience. By attracting renowned local bands "The Heaters" and "The Rain," and blowing out at the Bowles Bash, AEPi was at the forefront. It also set a new tradition on campus by sponsoring the first ever "Bear's Den Marathon," a hellish seventeen hours of eating and sitting to help Thurtene Carnival.

As always AEPi represented an unusual exuberance in participating in Thurtene carnival, as well as adding a brother to the Junior Honorary for the third straight year. By participating in the "Meals on Wheels," for the elderly and helping with the IFC Philanthropy, the Sigma Chapter proved again that AEPi is "A WAY OF LIFE."

AEPi Safety First

The horror of the AIDS epidemic has become a true scare to our entire global society. Once considered a disease only suffered by the homosexual community, no longer can we remain ignorant to the fact that AIDS effects all of us.

The Sigma chapter of AEPi took giant steps in dealing with the AIDS problem on the Washington University campus. By sponsoring the annual AIDS awareness benefit, with all proceeds going to St. Louis Effort for AIDS, Alpha Epsilon Pi took the responsibility of informing and educating the students of Wash U. of the options and importance of practicing safe sex.

In addition to providing a speaker (a victim of AIDS), and handing out free condoms, AEPi hosted the annual AIDS Awareness Party, featuring the famed band of St. Louis, "The Heaters." In total, the event raised close to $1000 for the St. Louis Effort for AIDS.

Beta Theta Pi

Founded on August 8, 1839 at Miami University in Ohio, Beta Theta Pi fraternity was the first college fraternity founded west of the Allegheny mountains. Standing proudly at 1 Fraternity Row since 1869, the Alpha Iota chapter was also the first fraternity to be founded at Washington University. Since its inception, the Alpha Iota chapter has striven to excel in all of its endeavors be they academic, athletic, philanthropic, or social. With strong bonds of brotherhood and continuous support from their alumni, Beta continues to be an active presence at Washington University.

"Once a Beta, always a Beta" was evident with brothers' positions of respect and prominence in every facet of society. Beta had strong representation in intramural sports competition and actives in varsity athletics from basketball and tennis, to soccer and rugby. Socially, Beta kept in tradition with their Mardi Gras Parade and Bash, Back in Black party, and, of course, Road Warrior. Once again, Beta actively participated in the annual Halloween philanthropy and Thurtene Carnival. Alpha Iota was proud of its continued campus leadership and promising future ahead.

BOTH Road Warrior

The annual Road Warrior Bash, which 'lights' up Washington University's spring social calendar, lasted from sundown to sunrise, or at least until it 'rained' on the party at 1 Fraternity Row. The barricade, which was built to create the Thunderdome effect around Castle Beta, consisted of everything, even the kitchen sink. In continuing with the tradition, Beta had the usual Road Warrior gear worn by actives, and well as the annual T.V. drop. Road Warrior was definitely a party unmatched by any other; there is no substitue. (1546)

Zeta Beta Tau

Located at 7020 Forsyth, ZBT is one of only two Washington University off-campus fraternities. ZBT takes pride in its location, providing a social outlet away from fraternity row for all students. The Alpha Xi chapter also takes pride in the activities it sponsors. There were many such activities during the past year.

ZBT organized many events on main campus such as the traditional Bowles Plaza Party, ZBTahiti, which was held in Karl Umrath Hall, and the highly successful Special Olympics Basketball Tournament in Francis Gymnasium. The brothers of Zeta Beta Tau also participated in Thurtene Carnival and the annual Sink-a-Sub contest at Forest Park Deli.

Another thing that the Zebes are noted for is establishing East Coast Express, a trucking company formed solely for bringing students' belongings to and from the east coast to Washington University.

Rich Marron, Howard Reber, Larry Bassin, and Joff Meltzer show that the brotherhood of ZBT extends beyond the limits of campus.

ZBT Special Olympics

1989 marked the largest, most successful basketball tournament in Special Olympics' four year history at Washington University. Approximately 400 athletes and over 1,000 students, faculty, and volunteers joined together on this day of fun and competition.

The tournament was sponsored by KSHE-95, Commerce Bank, Student Union, and private donators. The tournament could not have been successful without the enormous amount of time and energy donated by the brothers of the Zeta Beta Tau fraternity, who have supported the event since its inception on campus. The Zebes participated in everything from serving lunch to keeping score.

The overwhelming support generated by all involved provided the Special Olympics with an unforgettable day.

Theta Xi

The 1989-1990 academic year was a truly outstanding one for the men of the Iota Chapter of Theta Xi. Many thought that it would be a kind of transitional year, but looking back, Theta Xi adjusted quite well to the changes.

The biggest change was the movement of Theta Xi into a new insurance policy that helped them become a much more responsible fraternity. One aspect of this was that Theta Xi stopped serving keg beer. This gave them more control over their parties, and, according to some, better parties. Another change at Theta Xi was their newfound commitment to philanthropic events. Along with the continuation of past events, they added activities with deaf kids from St. Josephs. These activities included taking them to the zoo and to a Bear's football game, and playing basketball with them. This was also the year that Theta Xi turned around in I.M. sports, finishing the fall semester in second place. This included a first place finish in racketball as well as strong showings in football and volleyball.

While there were changes, a couple things remained the same: the Theta Xi's commitment to being the best fraternity, and the strong brotherhood felt by its members.

Juncti Juvant

"Juncti Juvant" - Together They Serve. These words adorn the crest over the mantle of house number seven. Never before had this motto been upheld as highly as during the 1989-90 school year.

Aside from supporting campus wide programs such as the treasure hunt for CASA, Special Olympics, and IFC holiday events for local children, Theta Xi sponsored many of their own events. Examples of this were the many events with St. Joseph's School for the Deaf. The brothers of Theta Xi enjoyed trips to the St. Louis Zoo, a Battling Bears home game, cookouts, games of 2-on-2 basketball, bowling, and the friendship of some terrific kids. Community service was only one of the many strengths that propelled Theta Xi into the new decade.

Kappa Sigma

The history of Kappa Sigma at Washington University is one of success, achievement, and most of all, strong brotherhood. With a history at Washington University of almost ninety years, they chapter was probably as strong as it has ever been in the 1989-90 school year.

For the second year in a row, Kappa Sigma won the Sigma Phi Epsilon Cup, the award for the best all-around fraternity. And for the tenth year out of eleven, Kappa Sigma, in conjunction with Kappa Kappa Gamma, won the Chancellor's Cup for the best Homecoming float.

The individuals of Kappa Sigma excel just as the group does. Some of the brothers included the Student Union Treasurer, the Student Life Managing Editor, and members of Thurtene and the Homecoming Steering Committee.

Afterhours After the Rat

The role of Afterhours in the Washington University social scene cannot be overstated. It is simply the thing to do, starting about 12:30 a.m. when evrybody gets kicked out of the Rat.

Every Thursday night, men and women; greeks and non-greeks; all sorts of people come together, drink beer, and have a good time. As a freshman female was overheard, "I came to Afterhours to PARTY... so I did."

Afterhours is a social staple here at Washington University. It is as much a part of life as reading the Underpass, pulling all-nighters, and going to the Rat. When the Rat closes, the partying begins at the Kappa Sig house.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon

Sigma Alpha Epsilon is a fraternity of tradition. Founded in Tuscaloosa, Alabama on March 9, 1856, it has grown to eminence in the Greek World through its strong active membership and its alumni ties. The Missouri Beta Chapter at Washington University is no different. Founded on April 20, 1869, it has been a chapter in motion.

1989-90 saw changes that proved beneficial to the brothers. The most visible was the new courtyard in front of the house. Stemming from the plans of a distinguished alumnus, Samir

Burshan, the brothers worked to raise the funds necessary to make this improvement.

The new courtyard stood as a symbol for the many changes that occurred within the chapter. New policies and procedures were devised in order to better manage the house and make Sigma Alpha Epsilon a force in the university community. The work that all of the brothers donated to make their fraternity a symbol of progress strengthened and cemented the ties of brotherhood that are Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

Paddy Murphy

Perhaps one of the greatest traditions in Sigma Alpha Epsilon is the hallowed advent of Paddy Murphy. This is a week long wake for the legendary brother, Paddy Murphy, who lived and died in the early part of this century. A righteous brother, Murphy was upset with the debauchery taking place in his chapter. In order to save his brothers, he decided to remove temptation by consuming it himself. Within a week of drinking all the beer and courting all the ladies, poor Brother Murphy's body gave in, and he passed away. He serves as a reminder of the consequences of recklessness and abandon within the brotherhood. Therefore, the SAE's hold a wake each year in his memory where excess and fun are the only rules.

Sigma Alpha Mu

Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity made many strides over 1989-90 academic year. As members of the surrounding community, the brothers planted trees for parks, transforming a piece of wasted earth into a sight of beauty. They also helped paint and maintain dilapidated homes and buildings in the area. As the country became increasingly aware of the problems of alcohol abuse, so did Sigma Alpha Mu. There were many efforts to increase self-awareness of alcohol and the dangers it can create. With many actives driving to parties from off campus locations, an active car-pool service was put into effect to help solve the problem of drinking and driving.

Sigma Alpha Mu also became a more diversified fraternity. With actives from all over the nation and some from other countries, members have become more enlightened and aware of other cultures. Also, they had a greater number of actives studying abroad in France, England, and Australia.

Through its strides in philanthropy, education, music appreciation, and self-awareness, Sigma Alpha Mu proved to be a diverse fraternity, making a strong impact on the Washington University community.

ΣΑΜ Bounce For Beats

Each spring the Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity come out in full force to support their national philanthrop, "Bounce for Beats." That is, members bounced basketballs to raise money for the American Heart Association. This event gave the brothers an opportunity to display both their philanthropic consciousness and their basketball dribbling skills, while providing money for the American Heart Association's research and funding of projects.

The event was held in front of two supermarkets, Schnuck's and National. The young men spent the day dribbling basketballs outside of the stores while displaying posters which explained the event. In the process, they asked the shoppers to donate their change to the cause. According to some of the brothers, the most significant part of "Bounce for Beats" was the satisfaction that came from helping others.

Sigma Nu

Sigma Nu was founded at the Virginia Military Institute in 1869. The chapter at Washington University was initiated in 1903, around the same time as the historic World's Fair. The Gamma chapter has had a long history of sincerity, punctuality and scholarship. As Rob Durbin, Jonathan Field, and Mark Osborn put it, "As long as we can remember, we've been smart."

At Sigma Nu, a lot of the guys have cool stereos. But when they're not listening to swank sounds, you can usually find them playing sports. From cycling to dead lifting, the Sigma Nu's will compete to the finish. And from Homecoming to Panhel Plunge to Student Union, you will find Sigma Nu well represented in every facet of campus life. In the immortal words of Ice-T, "I don't know what's going on in the other houses. We don't even have that much furniture."

Mud Bath For All

Every fall, the pool at Millbrook closes. But luckily for the Greeks on campus, Sigma Nu realizes this void in the community. On Thursday, the men of the fraternity grabbed their shovels and headed to the front of McMillan Hall to start digging. By Saturday morning the hole was filled with water, creating the largest mud bath on campus.

On Saturday, all of the Greeks dragged themselves out of bed to head for the Sigma Nu Relays. The relays consisted of athletic events such as the three legged race, the egg toss, the watermelon seed spitting contest, and of course, the keg throw. While all the events were exciting, the center of attention was definitely the mud pit.

Nobody is sure how Sigma Nu Relays began, but its purpose is to promote Greek unity. Far from a black tie affair, the relays are one of the most memorable times at Washington University.

Sigma Phi Epsilon

1989-90...a year in which trophies, awards, and laudatory praise flowed into the Missouri Beta Chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon in a seemingly endless wave. 1989-90...a year in which the brothers at Sig Ep affected the campus and the community in new and profound ways.

Success at Number 10 started before the school year even began. As hosts of Sigma Phi Epsilon's Conclave, the bi-annual summer meeting of representatives each of Sig Ep's more than 250 chapters, the local boys brought home a Buchanan Cup, the fraternity's award for chapter excellence.

The summer success was met with even greater success once the year started. Sig Ep, along with Pi Beta Phi, garnered two Homecoming awards in October. The soccer team fought its way to its first Point League championship. Not to be outdone, the Runnin' Eps collected their own championship trophy in IM Basketball.

Moreover, our dog Spencer was thrust into the campus spotlight as the guest of honor at our "Shoot the Dog" party.

Sig Ep sponsored the First Annual All-Greek College Bowl designed to promote educational awareness both on campus and in the community through donations to Project Literacy U.S. The fraternity again sponsored two very successful Blood Drives. Sig Eps also worked as hosts and organizers for Halloween and Easter events for the City of Sunset Hills. As a result, Sig Ep earned the Maurice Chambers Award for philanthropy for the second consecutive year.

As the year waned, Sig Ep, along with Alpha Phi, managed to capture yet one more award — at Thurtene Carnival. The looming Hall of Justice and the energetic cast of "Geriatric Justice" provided Sig Ep with the crown jewel in 1989-90 — its third consecutive Burmeister Cup. It was a fitting end to a truly splendid year.

No Trivial Matter

For ten points: What was the most unexpected all-Greek event at Washington University this year? Time's up. The correct answer was: The first annual Sigma Phi Epsilon College Bowl. Sig Ep invited teams from each sorority and fraternity to test their academic prowess in a quiz contest that covered such topics as history, literature, geography, science, and just plain old trivia. Entry fees were collected from each team and donated to Project Literacy U.S.

On November 18, the cerebral gladiators squared off in the Gargoyle. The action was fast and furious, as the number of competitors gradually dwindled. It came down to Sigma Nu and Alpha Epsilon Pi in the finals. When the dust cleared after a hard thought match, Sigma Nu had emerged as the first ever all-Greek College Bowl champions.

Sigma Chi

Founded in 1855 at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, Sigma Chi has been represented at Washington University by the Tau Tau chapter since 1903. The international fraternity of 210 chapters is a provider of rich tradition and strong brotherhood, striving to promote high ideals of friendship, justice, and learning. In recognition of their effort to strive for these standards of excellence, Tau Tau received its sixth J. Dwight Peterson Significant Chapter Award and the Legion of Honor Scholarship Award, two of Sigma Chi's grandest honors.

In efforts to improve the community, Sigma Chi contributed to the national service projects of the Cleo Wallace Village for Children and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. Locally, they gave time and money to Special Olympics, the American Heart & Lung Association, and other campus philanthropies.

Sigma Chi also strived in other areas. With one of the highest grade point averages among greeks, they continued to award the annual Sherman Senne ('25) Scholarship Award for academic achievement to a Washington student. Socially, they participated in Homecoming, Thurtene Carnival, Panhel Plunge, and sponsored Late Night parties and a week long Derby Days. Athletically, many varsity basketball, baseball, football, track and field, swimming, and club hockey members were Sigs.

Sigma Chi was also well represented on campus by Thurtene, AIESEC, Campus-Y, IFC members, as well as Resident Advisors and Freshmen Camp counselors. More importantly, however, members were visible at Washington through the spirit to join men, "possessing different temperaments, talents, and convictions," without surrendering individuality.

Derby Days

For one week every year, the brothers of Sigma Chi become temporarily obsessed with a peculiar, out-of-date fashion accessory - the derby hat. Derby Days is a sixty year old national fraternity tradition full of fun and philanthropic events. Throughout the week, sororities competed against each other in events such as a sing-off, a banner contest, an egg-drop, and "silly" Olympics. This year Sigma Chi especially emphasized the philanthropy side of Derby Days. Proceeds from the "Guess Who" rock concert and the "Rocky Horror Picture Show" were donated to the Cleo Wallace Center for abused children.

Alas, even traditions must change. In response to concerns the brothers altered or cut out several traditional events from the 1989 version of Derby Days, including the namesake "Derby Chase."

Tau Kappa Epsilon

The Xi chapter of Tau Kappa Epsilon has been at Washington University since 1920. They are scholarship winners, all-American Varsity Athletes, campus leaders, and yes - even pre-meds. Together they form a tight bond dedicated to ranking TKE number one at Washington. They emphasize personal development through a full year of social, athletic, and philanthropic events.

The 1989-90 year provided them with a full range of philanthropic events. The annual Keg Roll raised over $1000 to benefit the Make-A-Wish foundation. In the Spring they entertained under privileged and homeless children by taking them to a Bears basketball game with Pi Beta Phi, and to the St. Louis Zoo with Alpha Phi.

With strong commitments from each brother, it is no wonder why Tau Kappa Epsilon received the Covenant Mildred Chambers Chapter of Excellence award two years running. So, skip the row, step across Millbrook, and see the Sleeping Giants of Washington University.

A few guys try to get the rest of the brothers to join in on a mini wave.

"We're a group of diversified guys who are really close."

TKE Bombs Away

As winter came to an end, the basketball season was just coming to a peak. The normal crowd consisted of Washington University students, faculty, and an occasional family member. However, there was one game where the crowd was a little different.

On a chilly February afternoon, the brothers of TKE paired up with the sisters of Pi Phi to organize and participate in a fun filled day with some kids from the inner city. The afternoon started with hot dogs and hamburgers at the TKE house followed by a few playful games of football and basketball. After the food and games were over, everyone loaded a bus and rode over to the Athletic Complex to cheer the Bears on to victory.

Phi Delta Theta

Founded at Washington University in 1891, the Missouri Gamma chapter of Phi Delta Theta enjoys a long tradition of leadership and excellence. The 1989-1990 school year was no different. Members were active in a variety of campus organizations such as Campus Y, Pikers, Pre-Health Profession Society, IFC, as well as varsity and intramural sports.

Outside of athletics, the fraternity was busy with many activities around campus. Brothers were chosen as members to the junior men's and sophomore men's honoraries. For the second year in a row, one of the two student representatives to the Board of Trustees was a Phi Delt.

Phi Delta Theta showed its devotion to the community by spending many hours working with sick or abused children, restoring parks, and staffing university phone-a-thons. Once again, the Phi Deltas hosted the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS)/Phi Delta Theta (PDT) Memorial Golf Tournament which benefitted the ALS Association of the Greater St. Louis Area. Phi Delta Theta at Washington is not just a group of men, but a fraternity dedicated to being the very best.

The Phi Delt Fun-house awaits its guests.

"We have such a diverse population in the house with many extremes; however, we always find a way to come together - whether it's to have fun or take care of problems."

-Jim White

Some brothers offer basketball tips during Special Olympics.

Φ Δ Θ Bombs Away

The Phi Delt Bomb Squad came out in full force for the 1989-1990 basketball season. It was designed primarily to support brothers who played on the varsity basketball team, but the squad was quickly realized as a great opportunity to unite as a fraternity.

Members of the bomb squad enter the game in full army fatigues while carrying a disarmed bomb. Throughout the game members of the squad show their support by making tremendous noise at critical times. A "bomb" is posted every time Washington University makes a three-point shot, the play for which the squad originated.

Although the number of brothers who play basketball has dropped in recent years, the bomb squad continues as a proud tradition at Phi Delta Theta.

RESIDENTIAL LIFE

What Time is It?!?

"Sleep, huh?" This was the infamous comment muttered by one of those unfortunate individuals who was forced to face the dreaded ALLNIGHTER. By definition, an allnighter is pretty self-explanatory. It is the act of going for a long period of time (at least twenty-four hours, but often more) without sleep. People pulling allnighters stored up tremendous amounts of caffeine in an attempt to stay awake.

Allnighters induced many bizarre conversations and resulted in calls to Domino's and runs to I. H. O. P. Inevitably came the crash, which is the period after the allnighter is completed and the effects of all the injected caffeine have worn off, greatly accompanied by sleep. If nothing else, it was both a learning and growing experience.

Who Needs Sleep?

Residential Halls at three in the morning were livelier than at three in the afternoon. Students complained of no sleep but bragged of their late-night escapades. Pictures provided proof of events that often occurred during the night in the hallways lit only by red exit signs. The eerie light was enough to see form but not fully the individual. These hallways became stages for actors and actresses who either had too much at the row or just thought they had. Fraternizing often occurred in the hallway because it was much less threatening than the bedroom, though cuddling was common. There were often card games and always gossip to be found. Some left in search of food. No matter what mood you were in there was always lots to do at three in the morning.

Screw-Your-Roommate

Screw-Your-Roommate Set-ups were a success this year. Two mentionable ones are the Beaumont Set-up and the Umrath-Rubelmann Set-up.

The Beaumont Set-up took place on Friday, December 15th at Karl Umrath Lounge. It proved to be one of the most successful South-Forty events. More importantly, though, the set-up provided a great study break before finals. People who were out on that Friday night on their way to other parties even crashed the dance. The hard work and preparation of the Beaumont residential advisors and residents was very evident by the attention to details. The dance was semi-formal and the DJ's were students which guaranteed popular selections to be played all night. A photographer even captured the evening's highlights. The dance was also filled with great snacks, drinks, and decorations.

The "Ruby-Rath" April Fool's Set-up took place on Saturday, March 31st at Umrath Hall. The atmosphere was electric with anticipation, and the dance floor called to tapping feet. According to one Ruby-Rather, "The music was awesome and they (R.A.'s) impressed us with their moves!" In addition, the refreshments were excellent. There was more than just the celery and stale cookies, which are found at many parties. Another resident said, "I felt privileged to be invited to this set-up. Ruby-Rath is like one big family!"

With deferred rush beginning next year, this idea of residence hall set-ups could take the place of Greek set-ups in the fall. For those who already have set-up dances, this is still the best opportunity to "screw your roommate".

Ruby Beach

At first glance Washington University appeared to be hundreds of miles from the ocean. Under closer scrutiny, however, this myth was disproven. Yes, Washington University has a beach of its very own. Just a few steps outside of Rubelmann lies Ruby beach.

Almost one-hundred yards of uncrowded white cement. The beach is surrounded by the cool grass of the swamp and the constant breeze from Wohl Center. There is even a refreshment stand that would make Coney Islanders jealous, the Bear's Den.

When the sun shined brightly on this concrete beach, students were seen trying to darken their faded tans. The height of the tourist season on Ruby beach were the first few weeks of class and the period known to beachers as sunning week (a.k.a. reading week).

From a Lake to a Playground...

Located between Wohl Center, Rubelmann, the new residence hall, and the trees that border Big Bend, the area affectionately nicknamed the "Swamp" was originally designed to be a lake. However, the original plans for the South 40 changed, and the lake was never completed. Instead, there remained a slight valley, covered with grass, and left to the students' imaginations as to what to do with it.

At any time during the year, there were many people using the swamp for various activities. The spring and fall were perfect for basketball players and frisbee throwers. The winter provided the snow necessary for snow football and snowball fights. And of course, during all seasons, the swamp gave students a place to run around, chase each other, and just act crazy.

Laundry the Easy Way

In the basement of Lee Dorm there exists a little-known service to students: the Wash U Linen Service. Heading up this service for five years is Marge Sigelski. She and two part-time students were responsible for keeping track of the 2500 total sets and cleaning between 75-100 sets per day. One set includes: one fitted bottom sheet, one top sheet, one pillowcase, two big fluffy towels, and one washcloth.

The job held by Marge had one big problem-the seclusion of the basement of Lee. However, there were perks to the job. Getting to know the 478 students the linen service served was the best part of her job. "They're really super people!" she remarked with a smile.

Running this kind of business was not free of problems. Since students paid $45 for a 40-week period of fresh linen, the service was not profitable. The biggest problems Marge faced were with stains (How does one clean linen that was used to wash a car?) and the return of the linens at the end of the year.

During the summer, the linen service kicked into high gear. The entire South-40 needed to be fitted with sheets for conferences. Two 1200 person and one 1400 person conferences required the biggest challenge. Linen was changed every day for three to four days, and mountains of sheets and towels were sorted, counted, and then washed.

In keeping up with rising costs and expenses, Marge personally drafted a cost saving plan, a plan that saved Washington University $22,000 a year for this service. She won an award for her conscious effort in running the business efficiently.

Parking Solution

As a result of the complaints by students about the parking problems and the increasing number of students living on the South 40, the university worked on various ways to add more parking places. One way was to change the parking by Koenig and Liggett residence halls from parallel parking to perpendicular parking. However, the biggest change in parking was the addition of the new garage behind Koenig Hall. At first the construction resulted in the loss of the use of some spots, but once construction was complete, there was a substantial increase in the number of parking places available.

Rites of Fall and Spring

In keeping with tradition, the Congress of the South 40 sponsored two parties, Rites of Fall and Rites of Spring. Each party was a celebration of its own season, but more importantly they were chances for students to take a break from the daily stresses of their academic life and to relax with fellow residents. They also provided changes of pace from the usual party scenes of the Rat and the Row. If nothing else, these parties gave residents the opportunity to meet other students that they might not meet just hanging out in their halls. Students danced the night away with friends or just spent time meeting people and chatting over food and drink. Overall, students had a great time and enjoyed the chance to meet neighbors from various residence halls.

Not Just For Salads

Greenstuffs. A place to study? Students from the South Forty, the Row, and off-campus all gathered for quiet, intense studying. It was a great escape from a blasting stereo on the floor, a loud foos-ball table, a smoke-filled lounge, a cramped room, or a loud/accompanied roommate.

However, a small person-to-person conversation usually turned into a low murmur, followed by occasional giggles, then, of course, into a chorus of laughter. Studying often ended up in socializing among stressed-out students until silence was imposed on everyone by a student possessed with their studies.

Café Bear's Den

Only had a few minutes to grab a munchie? Needed a late night snack? Just wanted to eat and talk to friends? The Bear's Den was the place to go. From pancakes in the morning to mozzarella sticks after 10:00 p.m., students could always find something to eat. If people wanted to listen to music while they ate, they could fire a few quarters into the jukebox and listen to their favorite songs. Friendly, efficient personnel served hungry students quickly, despite the complaints while waiting in long lines. In a hurry? Eric could take an order in one hand and the meal card in the other, deliver the food, and wish one a good day all in a blink of the eye. Eat in or carry out. Bear's Den had what a hungry stomach wanted.

Prehistoric Partying

On Saturday, March 3rd, the Congress of the South-Forty sponsored its annual formal. The theme for this year's South-Forty Formal was the "Bedrock Ball," based on the cartoon, "The Flintstones." The Congress of the South-Forty Formal Committee Chair, Evan Friedel, estimated that well over three hundred people attended this year's Bedrock Ball at the Marriott Pavillion Hotel Downtown. Bob Kuban's Phoenix Band provided a very wide variety of music as formal guests danced every style they knew, and then some. Formal guests were a bit wary of the location at first. Many worried about escaping Marriott food on campus only to enjoy it later at a Marriott hotel. Not to worry, as students found, the catering services are wholly independent of each other. As one student exclaimed, "It was a 'rockin' time!"

Home Away From Home

One of the greatest challenges freshmen faced was fitting all of their stuff into their room and still making it livable. Students came up with many ways to create more usable space, from building a loft to getting rid of some of the furniture. Students decorated their rooms with posters and other various paraphernalia. Some students went so far as to paint murals on their walls. No matter how students ended up decorating their rooms, the goal for everyone was to make their new room into their own home away from home.

It's Room Selection Night!

It's Lotto Night. Washington University gathered in Seconds for the annual chaotic room selection game. The freshman flocked in dreaming of spacious double rooms instead of their present cramped triples. The sophomores came in hopes of privacy or a better view from the window— a view of the Arch from Shepley perhaps.

The routine followed picking up the housing contract, and getting the roommates' lotto numbers averaged. While waiting for their numbers to be called and watching the number of available rooms dwindle, the paired students finally decided who got to brave the "security check" and pick a room from the choices of Beaumont, Shepley, Eliot, or Lee.

Students who forgot about Housing Night wondered where they would live, in a triple with incoming freshmen?

The Driving Force

Sure there was The Coop. And Seconds served a lovely cheese-apple bake for the vegetarians on the Forty. But when your stomach started demanding real sustenance, the only answer was a resounding, "GET ME OUT OF HERE!"

So students turned to their hopefully generous friends-with-cars; the cars that were their chariots to the real world. Cars that no student wanted to do without. Begging and pleading, students offered to even pay for that lucky driver and the date of his or her choice. All this just to gobble up an IHOP Wash. U. all-you-can-eat Pancake Special at two in the a.m.

Students turned to such desperation simply for food. However, cars were desirable for many other reasons as well. These ranged from deep-rooted needs: from chocolate-binges, to escaping to a Tuesday matinee movie instead of lecture, to spontaneously road-tripping to Chicago, or just for discovering the Landing on a thirsty night.

Of all the species of cars that lived in the parking lots, one might have coveted the white '65 Mustang convertible or fire-engine red Mitsubishi Eclipse. One might have also noticed with awe how many different states were represented by license plates. One might even have laughed at a vanity plate. Yet when that Big Mac attack struck, anything that could have moved you and your annoyingly persistent stomach to the nearest Mickey D's looked like a limo—and your driver, for the moment, was idolized as your rescuer from the den of bears.

Wydown East and West

As the number of students attending Washington University began increasing, the university saw a need for more on-campus housing. Thus began the construction of what were soon to be named Wydown East and Wydown West Residence Halls. The original plan was for the halls to have four person suites with a common room and a kitchen, in the hope that juniors and seniors would choose to live in these halls, freeing the rest of the South 40 for underclassmen. The only change in the plan that occurred was that the halls were not built with a kitchen in each suite, but rather with one kitchen on each floor. The new residence halls also were built with conference and fitness rooms. These proved to be a very attractive option as juniors and seniors tried their hardest to get into these new halls on room selection night.

South Forty Facade

Where could a person have found various characters from many different Shakespearian plays on stage at the same time, with one brief scene featuring Batman and Robin? Why, at the South Forty Facade, of course.

Under the supervision of the Chair, Tracy Coe, residents of the Forty joined forces to build a facade to bring everyone back into the Shakespearean Era. Students worked long hours at The Lot to build a structure resembling an Old English Tudor home, complete with murals on the outer walls.

Inside the facade, Adam Goodie directed a group of student actors in the play, "Shakespearian Follies." In the script, the three witches from MacBeth decide to wreak havoc by collapsing several Shakespearian plays into one. Finally, Shakespeare, himself, appears on stage to save the day.

Friedman Lounge

Mondays at 9:00pm, the Congress of the South-Forty sponsored events such as presented speeches, discussions, and entertainment. Known as "Monday Night at Friedman Lounge," these scheduled events brought quite a turnout. Those who attended enjoyed the interesting presentations.

Besides this weekly diversion, Friedman Lounge was a quiet place to study on the South-Forty. The ambience was relaxed and cozy. There were big sofas located around the room with side tables and lamps on the sides of the sofas. Being located on the South-Forty, it was near places to get a quick bite to eat to relieve the tensions that arise from studying. Also students were allowed to eat and drink in the lounge. And best of all, the comfortable atmosphere reminded students of

Investing In AT&T

Whether it was to avoid homework or to call a faraway friend to wish them a happy birthday, the reason was irrelevant. Students spent a large part of their free time talking on the phone. Most freshmen came close to having coronaries when they received their first long distance phone bill. Unlike upperclassmen, freshmen did not immediately realize the benefits of budgeting their time and money when it came to talking long distance. Phone calls were not reserved just for friends who were miles away. As the year progressed phone calls were made to friends who lived closer and closer. By the end of the year just about everyone was calling their next door neighbor rather than walking out into the hall.

Perspective Freshmen

Periodically on campus, one would see a face that looked a little more lost than the face of an average student. This was not just an especially clueless student but rather a perspective freshman, affectionately known as a PF. PFs were very common around the springtime. There were several dead giveaways for detecting PFs. These included carrying a purse, walking with a map, and, especially, walking with a parent and having the parent be the guide. Although they stood out, they brought back memories of a time that every student experienced not long ago.

Spring Fever

Anytime throughout the year, students found reason upon reason to procrastinate studying. However, never was the problem greater than when spring fever hit. Whether it was to study, sleep, or just to hang out with friends, no student could resist the temptations of the great outdoors. At anytime during the day, one could find at least one student on Ruby Beach, a group of students playing in the Swamp, a couple people on their way to play basketball, and a few more on their way to the zoo.

Washington Hall

Washalloween

On Saturday, October 28, 1989, huge construction paper footprints led the way to the Washalloween party. This annual event helped bring people from the Forty to the estranged Washington Hall, nestled in the far side of Fontbonne College. To get to the festivities, partygoers had to venture up a staircase decorated with cobwebs and other paraphernalia. Eventually, after going down a darkened hall, pulsating music could be heard from the chapel building. Upon entering the room, one saw a stunning array of costumes. This included one person who was dressed in all black with letters pinned on them, going as blackmail, to an Arab princess. For some the party provided a first glimpse of Wash. Hall, but a good time was had by all who attended.

Splish Splash

Millbrook pool is a quiet kind of place. In the summer its waters offered relief from the relentless heat of the sun. When it was a glorious summer day it was the perfect place to catch a few rays and refresh yourself in the fresh air rather than in the over-chlorinated pool in the Athletic Complex.

In the winter, however, the cool, clear water mutated into a greenish-brown sludgelike substance. Freshman Allison Manley referred to it as "the most repulsive thing I've ever seen." Thus both in summer and winter Millbrook pool had a character all its own.

Farewell to the Forty

Tired of '40 life? Want some privacy? Sick of eating Saga food day after day and night after late night? What are you going to do? Rent an apartment off campus, of course!

Most come unfurnished, so that meant buying furniture. You then had a kitchen and that meant shopping for groceries, making your own food, and cleaning up.

Despite these typical adult responsibilities, students who lived off campus enjoyed it. "You feel more adult when you have your own apartment," commented one senior. Another added, "It's nice to have my own room."

Being on your own involved effort in regards to the social scene. Social activities required more planning. "You don't have an immediate social life by stepping out your door."

Off-campus housing attracted many students looking for privacy, real food, and some quiet. When asked about apartment life, one student responded, "It's great. I like it!" Now, are you ready?

Playing It Safe

The use of condoms has been recommended by the Surgeon General to reduce the risk of contracting AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. For this and other reasons, three years ago, condom machines were installed in the laundry rooms of residence halls and bathrooms of main campus buildings. Since their installation, David Watermeier, senior, has been stocking these machines. Watermeier acquired this unusual job when Dr. Mary Parker, Director of Health Services, asked for volunteers from the Emergency Support Team, where Watermeier is a member.

The number of machines has greatly diminished since they were installed. Originally, every residence hall had one, but by the end of the year, they only remained in Beaumont, G Hall, Shandeling, Shepley, Elliot, Rubelmann, and Umrath. Theft of the condom machines was also a problem on main campus.

Jayco, the distributor, originally installed the machines because Dr. Parker was concerned about sexually active students. But due to large monetary losses incurred by the thefts, she considered removing the remaining machines. Watermeier commented, "People should respect the fact that we have them (condom machines); they are a privilege."

Watermeier refilled the condom machines periodically after class. Although Watermeier did receive minimal compensation for his work as the campus "condom man", he did it as a service. When asked about the comments that he received when people saw him stocking the machines, he replied, "Most people don't really notice me. I carry around my supplies and tools in a little bag. So far, no one has asked me for free condoms."

Won't You DANCE With Me?!

"It's only rock and roll but we like it!" students sang as the original bad boys of rock and roll - the Rolling Stones - came to town for their final American tour. The geriatric crowd really grew during 1989-90: The Who were reunited for a final tour; Paul McCartney did a solo tour; tie-dyes and peace symbols sprang up for the Grateful Dead's resurrection. David Bowie promised a tour of classical material, while Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young delivered a new album.

Young M.C. became a fixture on fraternity row as he bust a move to the top of the charts. Although plagued by efforts of censorship, rap acts were increasingly seen in the charts. The gangster rap of Ice-T, N.W.A. and others had Mo. representative Jean Dixon pushing for warning labels on records. Even Bobby Brown wasn't safe. He was arrested in Georgia after expressing his prerogative on stage.

The big "house" that stormed in from Europe was led by J.M. Silk and popularized by Belgium's Technotronic. Dance music was a big success with the new faces of Milli Vanilli and Soul II Soul. Neneh Cherry and Paula Abdul shone with healthy doses of straight up jams. Janet Jackson added to the hype with her new national anthem 1814 Rhythm Nation.

World music broke cultural barriers; the Gipsy Kings became mega-stars everywhere but America, and Peter Gabriel raided other nations' rhythms. Even the Jamaican beat drew attention as Ziggy Marley won a Grammy.

Other notable celebrities included Lenny Kravitz and Mike Penn. Penn's ex-sister-in-law was busy expressing herself as Madonna mania continued. His purple highness, Prince, delivered the Batman album to a Bat-crazed America. The only thing that got more attention was New Kids on the Block.

All-in-all, students at any decibal level, were able to express themselves through a variety of musical tastes.

Did You Say SSSTRESS?

Finally, the last semester of college. It is what everyone waits for - so why all the nervous looks? What was it about winter break that ruined the fun of senior year? That's easy - the infamous question, "What are you doing after graduation??"

For those that applied to medical school, law school, or other graduate programs, second semester was a waiting period. Waiting for that one school to say: "Congratulations, you have been accepted. Please send your deposit immediately." For the lucky ones, there was the problem of which offer to accept. For others, there was the decision of what to do when the acceptance did not arrive. Before this, there was the period of standardized tests, applications, and interviews. This often brought back nightmares of high school. Thin versus fat envelopes once again took on meaning. Fortunately, most answers were out by April, and the last month of college was left to be enjoyed.

Another group of seniors faced the decision of how to market their education profitably. In other words, they were headed for "the real world". Resumes were the first step, followed by endless trips to a career counselor and the Career Library, and lots of mailings and interviews. For a few fortunate students, on campus interviewing through Business Placement, Engineering Placement, and/or the Career Center landed them a position. Others used personal contacts, job fairs, the Liberal Arts Consortia, and luck to help them. Strives to find a job before graduation made second semester senior year especially stressful.

Senior stress was also a product of change. Many feared losing touch with close friends, important organizations, and the cohesive collegiate environment. But, despite the stress, seniors left well-educated and better-prepared to face the future than they had been four years ago.

And the Latest Trend Is...

Although the students at this campus were not as fashion conscious as the students from A Different World, they did have their share of fads. Different populations on campus had different fads, each fad fitting within the overall fashion of the group.

There were the Quaddies, who were the latest version of the Hippies. They came complete with old, faded jeans, tie-dye t-shirts, crystal necklaces, and Berkenstocks. On the rest of campus, students were seen everywhere with leather bomber jackets and Levi's jeans. Girls discovered "scrunchies" to keep their hair up. Short black skirts seemed to be as common as wide lapels were in the 70's.

Entertainment took new steps with the introduction of Koosh balls to relieve stress, dancing plastic flowers to entertain on late nights, and Nintendo games to help procrastinate studying. Television also played its part in students' lives as people rearranged their schedules to watch The Simpsons, Wonder Years, and L.A. Law.

Eating Like Only Students Do

Where can you eat a Rat burger, enjoy a meal in the serene setting of the Bear's Den, or have Chinese food delivered from the Magic Wok? Only at Washington University are these feats, and others like them, possible. Students at Washington have a knack for eating weird foods at weird times in weird ways.

It has almost become an initiation rite for freshman to have their first 2 am Domino's pizza. If students felt daring, they got it with jalapeno peppers so no one else on their floor would eat any. Or for the more frugal, there was a pot of Ramen Soup. And, of course, there was always the good old standby of Macaroni and Cheese.

How many students have eaten a sandwich at the Deli without any bread because they forgot to check that box? There was also the usual Cafe a la Carte macaroni and cheese with Heinz 57 steak sauce (anything for flavor). For those who were trying to avoid the grease on campus there were the soggy salads at the Bears Den, tuna subs at the Gargoyle, and the Deli. But was it really worth ten dollars for a sandwich and three hour wait?

During finals, students resorted to drastic measures. Eating coffee grounds and chocolate bars or Jolt Cola and Vivarin became as common as all-nighters. This often led to the later meal of Pepto Bismol. However, this was assuming that there was time to eat, as many had to resort to eating out of vending machines between classes.

When there was a little spare cash, students flocked to the food courts at the Galleria and all you can eat pancakes at IHOP. For those with iron stomachs there were fast food places like Naugles and White Castle. Talayna's offered a big variety of food choices, along with naked statues and six foot tall images of biblical figures.

Despite all the moans and groans about the food, there were two occasions when students really looked forward to eating. Vacations back home guaranteed at least one home-cooked meal of the student's favorite food. In addition, Parents' Weekend provided great pleasure as students planned for weeks which restaurant their parents would take them to.

Preparing For Spring Break

Natalie Fowler tries to get a tan while catching up on some reading. In order to minimize her tan lines, she sun-bathes without shoes or socks. Photo by Kevin Lane.

Spring Break! Students looked forward to it from day one of the school year. As with any other special occasion, spring break required a lot of planning. The first step for students was to decide where to go. Typical places included the beaches of Florida, California, South Padre Island, Mexico, and Colorado (for skiing, of course). After the place was decided, and whom to go with, the next step was to get the cheapest possible price, and then figure out a way to pay for it. After all of the plans were made, there was still one thing that remained to be done: getting a tan.

In the weeks before spring break, the campus became filled with students trying to catch a few rays between classes. So, why was everyone desperately sun-bathing when they had already paid hundreds of dollars for a vacation in the sun? The answer is simple. Everyone knows that one cannot go to the beach pale. It is one of those unwritten laws.

It's All in the Hair

In the fifties it was the "bouffant", in the sixties it was the natural look, in the seventies it was long, but conservative, in the eighties it was back to the Tom Cruise look or the military flat top. As the nineties began, hair styles continued to say a lot about the personality of society, as well as each individual member of society.

Shaved heads were a trend that was especially creative. A bare head is like an artist's canvas waiting to be decorated - with anything from the Bears' emblem to the zodiac. Advantages to a shaved head included money saved from not having to buy hair supplies, time not spent fixing one's hair, and best of all, not having one's hair get messed up after riding in a convertible.

What about the "Big Hair" look? By the end of the year it began to look like big hair was on the way out and long or short straight hair was on the way back in.

Flatheads went out of style as well. The art of being able to rest one's books on top of one's head lost interest as the average text book began to weigh nearly ten pounds.

As everyone anxiously awaited the new looks for next season, some people stopped to ponder the importance of hair. What does it mean to be a natural blonde, a semi-natural blonde or an all out fake? What does it mean to have red streaks, blue streaks, or even yellow streaks in one's hair? Why did the wet/greasy look go in and out for men - does it have anything to do with the cost of shampoo? Finally, will big handled combs imprinted with words like "COOL" or "DANGER" ever come back into style like they were in the seventies?

Two Wheels Beat None

Wouldn't it have been nice to have been able to have found a parking space that is on the same side of the campus as your class, and not get a ticket for being in the wrong zone? Well, there was a way...ride your bike and leave your car at home. There were more advantages to riding a bicycle than just parking. The $100 parking sticker was reason enough for many students to abandon four wheels for only two. And, if that wasn't enough, Campus Police made bike locks available to all students.

Despite all the bonuses associated with riding a bike to campus, there was one main problem: bad weather! Rain, snow, and ice was enough for some to retire their wheels for awhile and resort to the old practice of hitching rides with friends. All in all, four wheels beat two, but two wheels still beat none.

The Astro Van Man

Okay, you needed a little money from the Option machine so you could go over to Baskin-Robbins and get a double Rocky Road on a sugar cone. So you pulled up to Mallinckrodt...no yellow parking spaces available! "Well, I'll be here only a minute," you said to yourself, and thereby justified parking in that empty space reserved for maintenance vehicles. Returning to your car, the money burning a hole in your little pocket, you noticed something was wrong. Tom George had graced your car with his presence and that $10 you had just gotten from the ATM would be going to the Transportation Office to pay for your eighth parking ticket of the year.

Tom George, the fear of every Washington University parker, has been cruising the campus for eleven years, writing up parking tickets, and listening to hundreds of "I was only parked here for a second" stories. Tom came to work at Washington University in 1979, after retiring from a 30-year career as a St. Louis firefighter. Before his arrival, monitoring of the parking lots was performed by Campus Police. But as the school, and its parking problems grew, so did the need for a full-time employee. Tom's day begins at 7:30 AM, regardless of rain, snow, or shine. During a typical day, he drives around campus in his ubiquitous red Dodge Caravan...thus came his nickname "The Astro Van Man." He typically dispenses between 75 and 100 tickets a day. If you came out and found him ticketing your car, he might have given you a break. But if you were parked in a handicapped spot, there were no favors. Another of his pet peeves, due to his experience as a fireman, is parking in the fire lanes. After running into burning buildings for years, Tom stresses how important it is to keep these lanes accessible for rescue vehicles.

Tom's job puts him in a difficult position. He absolutely hated making people mad. But some people just did not understand that he was just doing his job when he ticketed them, and many took it personally. In fact, over the years disgruntled persons have spray-painted and severely dented his van. (Incidentally, he takes care of maintaining the van, a task that was not part of his job description.) Of course, there are those who have vented their anger in more direct ways. Tom says that the women are every bit as practiced as the men when it comes to cursing at him. Occasionally, he has run across a car sporting a stolen permit. When this happened he blocked the car in with the van and called Campus Police for back-up. Indeed, he has even run across many cases of bogus parking permits, forged using a xerox machine. One student went so far as to turn a '87-'88 pentagon into a '88-'89 hexagon with the help of a little yellow paint; Tom nabbed him.

When he started this job, Tom planned to be at Wash U. for only a year or two. "But," he says "I like my job. I'm out and around and moving, and I like that." He likes most of the students and faculty here, so he has no plans to leave Washington any time soon. Since getting at least one ticket from Tom George is an event experienced by 99.9% of the campus, there has been talk of saving time and just including a few in each freshman orientation packet. Tom probably would not complain.

Winter Wonderland

Every time there was the slightest weather change, it seemed as if there was some invisible force pulling students away from their books, dragging them outside to do the "seasonal" activities. It was as if the students did not get outside right away and enjoy the new weather, they would lose the chance.

Winter was no different than any other season in attracting students of all backgrounds. At the first sign of snow, students dropped their books, bundled up in three layers of clothing, and rushed outside to sled down the hill behind the I.M. field, to build snowmen, or just to have an old fashion snowball fight.

In addition to the activities that could be done right outside the door, there were special winter outings that became a must. The ice skating rink in Forest Park attracted many people by having occasional Late Skate sessions for students only. These sessions proved fun for all who braved the cold weather.

Ratburgers For Lunch?

The Umrathskellar, more commonly known as The Rat, is a place familiar to all students by the second week of freshman year. Thursday night at the Rat is a tradition on the Washington University campus. However, there is more to the Rat than just the big cups of beer they serve. They are also known for their Ratburgers.

For many students, the Rat proved to be a great place to get a quick lunch in the middle of the day. People who did not want to face the crowds at the Deli, or the line at the Gargoyle, always had the option of eating a burger, hot dog, or chicken sandwich from the Rat. Some people ate at the Rat to save time, but others ate there because they just missed the food from the Bear's Den. Unlike Cafe A La Carte, The Rat gave students the option of where to sit while enjoying their oh-so-healthy meal. Anyone who did not want to listen to video games while watching a big screen T.V. had the choice of taking their food outside to Bowles plaza.

Time For A Nap

It was 2:00 in the afternoon, you had a two hour break ahead of you, and you had nothing to do. So, where did you go to get comfortable? The green chairs in Mallinkrodt, or course. You actually had every intention of getting ahead in your reading, but of course you did not get any work done. After about two minutes in the chairs, you found yourself being lulled into a deep sleep. You tried to fight it, but for some reason, the chair just would not let you stay awake. It was as if the chair held some kind of power that was stronger than a sleeping pill. Finally, you let your body slip into a deep slumber, hoping that someone would be kind enough to wake you before in time to get to your next class.

After a few times of telling yourself that you would actually go to the green chairs to study, you learned that it was hopeless. You finally admitted to yourself that you were actually going there to take a nap between classes. Then that horrible day arrived. You had pulled an all-nighter to study for a Chemistry exam, barely managed to stay awake during your first class, and could not wait to catch an hour worth of sleep. But, as you dragged yourself down the stairs, you saw what seemed like a nightmare: the green chairs were gone! They had been pushed aside to make room for a giant poster sale. So, you gave up yet another hour of sleep, this time to look for one more poster for your walls.

Special Campus "Bouncers"

No matter what weekend you looked at, there was always at least one party to go to on main campus. From parties at the Row to events at the Gargoyle, there was one thing that was in common: Patrol Guards. It was not a choice to have the guards, it was a requirement for hosting a party.

Dressed in recognizable green sweatshirts, Patrol Guards were the equivalent of bouncers at bars. They were there to card for student I.D.'s, check the guest list for closed parties, and make sure that nothing got out of hand. There was the constant problem of high school kids trying to crash open parties, and students trying to get into closed parties that they were not invited to. However, the biggest problem that the guards had was making sure that there were plenty of non-alcoholic beverages and non-salty food to accompany any beer or liquor being served. For most parties, this meant Vess soda along with bins of celery, carrots, and the famous cheap party cookies.

Every Dog Has His Day

At least on the Washington University campus, this is a true statement. Everybody knows the rumor that way back when, some benefactor donated tons of money with the provision that dogs would always be able to run around on campus without leashes. Well, there is no written provision, but at all times during the year, the campus was filled with dogs playing with each other and with the students. As long as no one complained, the dogs were left to run around free. There was one time, however, when a couple dogs were hauled off to the pound for being in the Rat, which is against health code regulations.

Many of the dogs were owned by fraternity members and lived on the Row. Two of the more well known of the dogs were Spencer from the Sig Ep house, and Wrigley from the SAE house. Living on campus made it possible for them to wander on campus any time of the day or night.

Many other dogs lived off campus, and came to school each morning with their owners. While the students were in class, the dogs were outside playing. When class was over, student and dog went home together. Bringing their dogs to campus was beneficial to the students, as well as the dogs. The dogs did not remain stuck in a small apartment, and the students did not have to rush home, hoping that their dog had not wet the floor or chewed up the furniture.

The most common place to see dogs was on the Law Field, but this was by no means the only place they went. The campus dogs could always find a way into any building on campus, but the most popular building was Mallinkrodt. Needless to say, the Deli was especially popular with the dogs. But no matter where the dogs were, they got attention. In fact, it is quite possible that the campus dogs were more popular and well known than any single student.

The Bearcade Attraction

It was three o'clock in the afternoon. You had just gotten out of class, and were on the way back to your dorm room to study before dinner. But, like always, you never made it that far. As you passed through Wohl center, you felt the pull of the Bearcade. No matter how hard you tried, you just could not resist the video games that were calling out to you. Feeling a little guilty about that test you should have been studying for, you succumbed to the urge and told yourself that you would play just one game. Two hours later, you were still there, telling yourself that this would absolutely be your last game, really! Whether it was blowing up alien ships, karate-chopping gang members, or saving the princess in Mario Brothers, video games provided a good way to relax after class and waste away a couple of hours.

Students As DJ's

Everybody knows that a party just is not a party without lots of people, food, drinks, and some kind of loud, blaring music. It does not matter what kind of party it is, music is a requirement. After all, without music, there isn't anything to dance to, and there isn't any noise to shout over.

However, for many of the parties on campus, organizations hired student Disc jockeys from KWUR, or students who had their own enterprising turn-table businesses instead of live bands. Disc Jockeys were found at all kinds of events ranging from Fraternity parties, dormitory dances, and group celebrations, usually playing the most popular dance tunes, like the Cure and New Order, and favorite classics, like Bob Segar's "Old Time Rock and Roll".

Disc Jockeys from KWUR were usually paid fifty dollars for doing a party, which included set-up and clean-up of the station's equipment. DJ's found that it was a good way to make money, and they did not mind sacrificing a Friday or Saturday night. Most party-goers enjoyed the DJ's more than live bands. Freshman Deb Faber said, "Usually bands play music that's easier to listen to than to dance to, and the DJ's can play continuous, danceable music for many fun-filled hours with no breaks".

Siblings At School

For most of us, coming to college meant a chance to get away from our families and try out our identities in an all new setting. Some students, however, brought their families with them. Having siblings on campus led to a very different type of college experience. Freshman year was a time for meeting new people and learning independence. But, having a sibling on campus meant an extra close friend to talk to, or at times, an extra rival to fight with.

This year, like many others, there were quite a few brother-sister, brother-brother, and sister-sister combinations. How did they like attending school together, as well as seeing each other at home? Sophomore Adena Brumer said of her brother,

Freshman Aaron, "We get along better here than we do at home because our parents aren't around. It's funny—we're so different that people don't usually make the connection that we're related. And I don't see him that often, since he's in Architecture, and I'm in Drama. But it's definitely nice having him around." Freshman Lisa Levine said the same of she and her brother Mark, a Junior: "We lead our own lives...we don't make plans to see each other." On the other hand, Junior Russell Lloyd and his Freshman sister Rebecca see each other more often. Said Russell, of having his sister at the same school as him, "It's really nice because we are really different at college. We are a lot closer than we were in high school."

Hospital and Medical Center

St. John Hospital and Medical Center is a 607-bed, high technology tertiary care medical center providing the highest quality health care to its community. The hospital is recognized in Southeastern Michigan for its medical excellence in a number of clinical areas. We have recently completed a major renovation and expansion program including an Emergency Center, Critical Care Units, Operating Suites — including two heart rooms — and a new Physical Therapy Department. The new Critical Care Building houses Surgical Services — including a Post-Anesthesia Care Unit, Pre-Operative Hold Area, an Ambulatory Surgery Unit and a Peri-Operative Program. The Emergency Center, one of 50 nationally designated major trauma centers, includes an Emergency Holding Unit and an 'Express Care' treatment center. In addition to being a busy cardiac center, the hospital is also designated as a Regional Level III Perinatal Center.

We invite students and health care professionals to take a look at what we have to offer. Specialty areas include:

- ◀ Anesthesia      ▶ Perfusion
- ▶ Nursing      ◀ Physical Therapy

Salaries are highly competitive with other area hospitals and commensurate with education and experience. Differentials are paid for evenings, nights and weekends. Employees receive a review and wage adjustment at six months and one year after hire. Merit reviews then occur on an annual basis.

A comprehensive benefit package program is provided for full and authorized part time employees. Benefits include sick and vacation time, personal days, floating holidays, health and dental insurance and tuition assistance. Individualized orientation programs are provided to all new employees. Educational inservices are offered on an ongoing basis as well as continuing education credits. We also serve as a clinical affiliation for various nursing and health professional programs.

St. John Hospital and Medical Center is situated in a residential community on the fringes of Grosse Pointe and Lake St. Clair. You will have the advantage of a large suburban community, located near six colleges and universities. Comfortable and attractive housing is nearby.

SJH&MC is JCAHO accredited, a member of The American Hospital Association, Michigan Hospital Association and Catholic Hospital Association.

For more information about these and other programs, please contact our Human Resources Department. We are an equal opportunity employer.

You'll have the big picture.

The question is, how much will you see?

When you join Monsanto, we'll make sure you know just how your work fits into the company's overall strategies. You'll understand its relevance. You'll know exactly where it can lead.

Empowerment to Succeed

Given the big picture, your individual goals can become crystal clear. And you can concentrate on reaching them.

"Upward vision" is part of the Monsanto commitment to empower top performers with the tools they need to succeed. That commitment is an assurance that you will also find independence, enormous resources, and plenty of responsibility here.

The Challenges Ahead

The questions you must ask yourself are these: What will I see when I find these tools? What will I do with empowerment when it is in my hands? Can I meet the challenges that certainly accompany such opportunity? Will I combine independent thinking with teamwork?

Monsanto is a place for leaders, decision-makers. Bring your technical talents, because they are critical. But also be prepared to join a workplace that will challenge your determination, autonomy and savvy.

The Perfect Time to Join us.

What an opportune time, indeed, to join Monsanto! A time of sharp focus on the development of exciting, high-performance life-science products. High-value chemicals, plastics, coatings and fibers. Ultra-quality agricultural chemicals.

The biotech-based super-technologies of agrigenetics. Life-giving pharmaceuticals. And more!

Exceptional opportunities exist for individuals with bachelor and advanced degrees in electrical, mechanical and chemical engineering, chemistry, biology, computer science, business administration and other non-technical disciplines.

The Best Medicine

Without a doubt, there is one medicine that cannot be matched. It's not a pill, capsule, liquid or injection, and it need not be expensive. As a matter of fact, it may not cost you anything at all.

What is it? The best of all medicines is a "healthy lifestyle." Not only can it keep you in the best of health, it can also give you a wonderful sense of well-being.

What is a healthy lifestyle?

Basically, a healthy lifestyle is made up of rather simple elements.

1. GOOD DIET: a varied diet that includes the proper intake of essential nutrients, particularly proteins, fiber, minerals and vitamins, without excessive salt, sugar and fats.
2. WEIGHT CONTROL: to help prevent illnesses associated with obesity, such as diabetes, hypertension and some cancers. Food intake should be adequate to maintain optimal body weight, and it should be geared to your level of physical activity.
3. EXERCISE: tones the tissue, is good for the heart and blood vessels, and helps bring the proper nutrients to cells throughout the body. Exercise can be any one of many sports: swimming, tennis, bowling, skiing, golf, bicycle riding, jogging, etc. If you cannot afford or do not enjoy such sports, simply walking several miles every day can keep you fit and help you look trim.
4. REST AND RELAXATION: That means rest breaks (both morning and afternoon), a good night's sleep, healthful weekend activities and regular vacations.
5. THINGS TO AVOID: Don't eat foods to which you are allergic or sensitive. Avoid irritants in clothing and in your environment. Whenever possible, avoid situations that are tension and anxiety producing. Above all, avoid excessive smoking and alcohol. Cut down or stop; better yet, don't start.

These are five good Healthy Lifestyle rules, which both you and your family should follow.

Partners in Healthcare:

It is up to you to take the first step.

Try to get your family to join you. And get the guidance of your physician, pharmacist and other healthcare professionals.

Your doctor is important.

First of all, see your doctor for a checkup and to help work out the right lifestyle program for you. Your physician will be able to monitor your progress and adjust your program as necessary.

All those who discover, develop and distribute medicines complete the partnership.

Even with the healthiest lifestyle, people may find it necessary to take some kind of medicine. Pfizer's ongoing research brings you essential medicines for a wide range of diseases. Through development of these medicines, we are fulfilling our responsibility as one of your partners in healthcare.

EDITORS' NOTE

Well, its about time, you say? Here it is, two years and many grey hairs later: The Official 1990 Hatchet Yearbook of Washington University in St. Louis (-applause-).

We'd like to thank Joey Henderson, our advisor; Warren Klawiter and Raul Alcanter of Josten's; Joel Siegel of Varden Studios; Greg Anthony of Anthony

Advertising; Kyle Kabance of Kabance Studios; Shirley Noah and Phyllis Smith of Student Union; Brenda McCall of Scheduling; Herb Whiteman of Photographic Services; and Mike Wolf of Washington University Sports Information. Now, formalities aside, we'd like to extend our deepest gratitude to Forsythe Computers for constantly repairing our temperamental machine (no more smoke comes out of it!); the Coke Machine Man (CMM) for refilling the fountain of caffeine downstairs; who?; Ripple for keeping us company next door; not the Air Conditioner Man (ACM) for never fixing our AC; the illustrious staff of this oh-so-fine publication who overcame all "Hatchetizing Hardships" and put in their good efforts to finish this ; the Clean-Tech people for emptying our plethora o' garbage; and of course, Terry Shubkin, who although she could not complete the book did a damn fine job starting it.

COLOPHON

The 1990 Hatchet was printed by Josten's Printing and Publishing Company in Topeka, KS. The 364 page book had a press run of 3500. The cover was sketched by staff members; the artwork was done by the Josten's Art Department. The cover is a lithograph, and the endsheets are Medium Blue 285. Software used was Pagemaker 3.0 and 4.0, and Adobe Illustrator. Hardware used was Macintosh SE and Macintosh IIfx. Major font used was Avant Garde. Candid photos were taken by staff photographers and contributors. Sorority group shots were by Kabance Photo Services. Athletic team shots were done by Photographic Services of Washington University. Student portraits were taken by Varden Studios. Hatchet was funded by students through Student Union. The editors can be contacted for further information by writing to:
